

UNIVERSITY OF DELHI

INSTITUTE OF POST GRADU-ATE (E) STUDIES LIBRARY

EK

41

Ac. No. E17526

This book should be returned on or before the last date stamped below. An overdue charge of 5 Paise/25 Paise (Text-books) will be collected for each day the book is kept overtime. 38.12.71

28.12.71

[illegible]

WOMEN IN RGVEDA

BY

BHAGWAT SARAN UPADHYA, M.A.

WITH A FOREWORD BY

SIR S. RADHAKRISHNAN, M. A., LL. D., D. Litt., F. B. A.,

Spalding Professor of Eastern Philosophy and Religions, Oxford :

Sir Sayaji Rao Gaekwad Professor of Indian

Culture and Civilization and Vice-Chancellor,

Benares Hindu University.

NAND KISHORE & BROS.,

BENARES

EV
Y744-15.B
H1

E17526

First Edition 1933, Second Edition (Revised and Enlarged) 1941

TO MY MOTHER
ŚRIMATI MAHADEVI UPADHYAYA

PREFACE

The present work is the second edition of my Women in R̥gveda. The first edition has been thoroughly revised and doubly enlarged in this venture. As my study of the R̥gveda has spread now over a long period of time and as new matter has come to light, a revised edition has become imperative; and here is the result of my efforts. The work has been almost rewritten and it can be considered as an altogether new book. The method followed in the treatment of the theme of this volume is constructive, analytical and critical. It has been my endeavour to piece together, weigh and incorporate all matter that my study of this 'first book of mankind' has disclosed to me. The range of my work has been limited exclusively to the R̥gveda except where I have sought help from the Brāhmaṇas and later literature for elucidation. The ground has been almost untrodden and the difficulties therefore have by no means been few. Most of the works that have treated of the subject of ancient Indian women have started either with the epic period or somewhere in its vicinity, but my efforts have convinced me that the R̥gveda conceals a mine of information and that every effort will yield surprising results. And, I trust, there will be hardly any occasion for a savant to deplore that 'the scarcity of material in the R̥gveda makes it impossible for a scholar to handle the subject'.

The frame-work of the first edition had been prepared under the able guidance of Dr. Radhakumud Mookerji, M.A., F.R.S., Ph. D., Professor and Head of the Department of Indian History, Lucknow University, under whom I worked for some time as a Research Scholar. The second edition has in many instances kept close to the earlier arrangement. The references to the works of modern authors have been gratefully acknowledged in the footnotes and in the Bibliography appended at the end of this book.

Dr. Sir S. Radhakrishnan has placed me under a deep debt of gratitude by finding time amidst his various preoccupations to add a Foreward to this volume. My most respectful thanks are due to him. I acknowledge with a genuine sense of obligation the encouragement given to me by Dr. U. C. Nag, M.A., Ph.D. (London), Principal, C. H. C., Benares Hindu University, who kindly read through the manuscript of this work. I shall indeed be failing in my duty if I omit to thank my friend Professor N. M. Kulkarni, M. A., of the Benares Hindu University, for having taken great pains in reading the proofs. Mrs. Rukmini A. Vasavada, B. A. (Hons.) has prepared the Index to this volume and I thank her cordially for her kindness.

Benares Hindu University, }
21-3-1941. }

B. S. U.

FOREWORD

This book deals with the status of women in the period of the Rg Veda and treats with much learning and discrimination the difficult problems of the morals and manners, of the marriage and education of women as set forth in the Rg Veda. With an impressive impartiality the author brings out the exalted ideals as well as the lapses from them. An historical account of the institution of marriage and its forms is likely to induce in us an idea of the relativity of social habits and customs; yet it reveals the prevalence of an unchallenged tradition, an ideal definite, vivid, and well established and profusely illustrated by the stories of famous women, an ideal which our women, who are not ultramodern accept and aspire to live up to. Marriage is not an instinct but an institution based on an instinct. While we are under a biological necessity to mate and perpetuate our kind as birds and animals, we can make it the basis of a marriage of minds, the interplay of the inmost thoughts and feelings of two human beings. The adjustment of two personalities to a common way of life is full of delights and difficulties, reconciliations and disagreements. Marriage is not to be regarded as a temporary association to be dissolved at the fancy of the parties. There is a good deal to be said for the ideal of the wife as ardhāṅgī. The Greek myth represents that human beings were originally composed of a man and a woman, that some God divided each being in two and these separated halves are continually searching for one another. To look upon husband and wife as complementaries which make up a whole is the true implication of married life.

CONTENTS

CHAPTER I

THE TRANSCENDENT WOMAN	Pp. 1-32
------------------------	------	------	----------

Aditi 8-8, Diti 8, Prthivi 9, Dyāvā-Prthivi 10, Sitā 11, Uṣā 12-17, Rātri, 18, Dawn and Night 19, Sūryā 19-20, Indrāṇi 20-21, Vāc 21-22, Ilā 22-23, Sarasvatī 23-24, Bhārati, Hotra and Varuṇi, Saranyū 24, Sinivālī and Guṅgū, Rākā, Bṛhaddivā 25, Sunṛtā, Purandhi, Dhīṣaṇā, Asumati, Nirṛti, Śraddhā, Anumati 26, Aramati, Dampati, Pṛṣni, Aranyāni 27, Varuṇāni, Agnyāni 28, Rivers, Sarasvatī 28-30, Apsarases 30-31.

CHAPTER II

THE MAIDEN	Pp. 33-40
------------	------	------	-----------

Daughter—Her place in the Household 33-34, Her duties 35-36, Her rights 36-39, Freedom 39-40.

CHAPTER III

MARRIAGE	Pp. 41-89
----------	------	-----	-----------

Marriage 41-42, Beginning 42-43, Importance of Marriage 43-44, Freedom of Marriage 45-46, Its control 46-49, Qualifications and Disqualifications 49-50, Marriageable Age 50-53, Old-age Marriages and Sexual Invalids 53-54, Marriage in order of Age 54-55, Intermarriage 55-64, Śyāvāśva 57-60, Kakṣivan 60-61, Vimada 61, Kinds of Marriage 65-74, Āsura-Brāhma 65-66, Prājāpatya 66-67, Dowry 67-69, Svayamvara 70, Gāndharva 70-71, Rākṣasa 71-72, Marriage proper 74-83, Departure of the Bride 84, Consummation of marriage 84-86, Wedding dress 86-87, Some remarks about marriage 87-89.

CHAPTER IV

MARRIAGE—Its Features, Customs and Usages	Pp 90-128
---	------	------	-----------

Widows 91-92, Remarriage of Widows 92-96, Burning of the Widow 96-99, Niyoga 99-101, Monogamy 101-103, Polygamy 103-107, Polygamy among kings, nobles and priests 107-109, Slave-girls 109-111, Polyandry 112, Aśvins 112-113, Maruts 113-114, Viśvedevas and others 114-116, Incestuous marriages 116-117, Brother and Sister marriage 117-125, Analysis of the dialogue 118-122, Support of Puranic traditions 122-124, Buddhist traditions 124-125, Parental incest 126-128.

CHAPTER V

THE WIFE AND MOTHER	Pp. 129-155
---------------------	------	------	-------------

Wife, her dignity 129-130, Domestic happiness 130-133, Her duties 133-38, Religions 134-137, Temporal 137-138, Conjugal relationship 139-140, The gambler's hymn 140-142, Some other duties 143-144, Mother 144-146, Legal Status of Wife 146-153, Social 147-150, Female slaves 150, The other side of the picture 153-155.

CHAPTER VI

ADORNMENT	Pp. 156-172
-----------	-----	------	-------------

Dress 156-165, Material cloth 158, Skins 158-159, Wool 159-160, Cotton 160, Articles of Dress 161, Śāmulya 161, Drāpi 162, Vāsa 162, Sic 162, Adhi-vāsa 163, Brocades 164, Peśas 165, Stitched clothes 165, Use of footwear 165, Ornaments 165-168, Hair-coiffure 168-169, Perfumes 169-170, Furniture 170-172.

CHAPTER VII

EDUCATION	Pp. 173-188
-----------	------	------	-------------

The trend 173-174, Necessity of Education 174-175, Nature of Education and Subjects of Study 175, Language and Literature, Ghosā, Lopāmudrā, Apālā, Viśvavārā, Romaśā, Sūryā 176, Vasukara's wife, Gaupāyana's mother, Indrānī, Indra's mothers, Juhū, Śraddhā, Sarparājñī and Mamatā 177, Yami, Urvaśī 178, Tradition and Mythology 178-179, Fine Arts, Poetry, Drama 179, Music 180, Dancing 180-181, Military training 181-183, Viśpalā 182, Mudgalānī 182-88.

CHAPTER VIII

LIBERTY	Pp. 184-192
---------	------	------	-------------

Purdah, Festal gatherings, the Assembly and the Samana 185-190, Athens 190-191, Indo-Aryan Women 191-192.

CHAPTER IX

MORALITY	Pp. 193-206
----------	------	------	-------------

Normal morality 193-194, Lawless unions 194, Jāra 195-200, Elopements Courtesans 200, Adultery 201, Samana 201-205, Polygamy, Polyandry and Levirate, Exposure of illegitimate children 205, Women soldiers 205-206.

CHAPTER X

SUMMARY	207-228
BIBLIOGRAPHY	229-231
INDEX	233-241

WOMEN IN RGVEDA

CHAPTER I

THE TRANSCENDENT WOMAN

About twenty centuries before Christ a young, gay and sturdy race crossed the north-western frontier of India and stood on the threshold of the Saptasindhu, the land of the seven rivers. The Indo-Aryans, as they are now called, forming the extreme eastern branch of the larger Indo-European family, looked in front of them. At their feet lay stretched the beautiful, rich valleys of the wide swift-flowing rivers which struck them as seas (sindhu). Little did they know that their steel would strike against steel gripped by hands no less strong than their own and that the mastery for the land towards the east would be won only after the most stubborn resistance had been overcome at every step. The primeval forests were spotted-over with habitats which boasted of 'iron forts' and buildings supported by a 'hundred metallic columns.' These local inhabitants of India, called the snub-nosed Dāsas and Dasyus, short-statured and dark, and living under the amenities of a distinctly superior material civilization, later met their stalwart adversaries, the Aryans, tall, fair and handsome, who were destined to drive them out from their mansions and palaces.

The Aryans were sentimental, romantic and grateful and the enormous sylvan stretch before them afforded them great opportunities and furnished them with groves and arbours where to retire and weave their yarns of dreamy speculations. The magic land in front of them unfolded to these newcomers its endless treasures and struck them with prospects of an optimistic future and settled conditions of life which they had seldom known in their former shifting homes. The devout heart beat with gratitude and the loving soul eager to call the new glories its own burst forth into rapturous melody. From trembling lips there arose and reverberated thrilling notes in praise of Nature, which welcomed them. The joyous songs, the hymns of gratitude, in admiration of the great immortal elements of Nature, sent a thrill of joy through the veins of the Aryans and created in them a never-dying faith in future. The pleasing, vivifying and kindly phenomena of nature had also their terrible, destructive and dispiriting counterparts, and their beholders were consequently struck with both awe and admiration. For the first time in the history of mankind, man started creating gods after his own image. "The process of god-making" says Sir S. Radhakrishnan,¹ "in the factory of man's mind cannot be seen so clearly anywhere else as in the Rġveda. We have in it the freshness and splendour of the morning of man's mind still undulled by past custom or fixed routine." The tremulous notes that the Rġvedic bards generated were addressed to the benign gods to fulfil their needs and requirements in plenty and to the terrible ones to protect them from their wrath consequent upon their sins unwittingly committed. The Rġveda was the result of these great hymns embodying the love and fear of early civilized man.

We know nothing of the development of the literature of the Rġveda Samhitā which we find in a complete form. It is verily a Minerva born in panoply. Wilson² aptly remarks: "When the texts of the Rġ and Yajur Vedas are completed, we shall be in the possession of materials sufficient for the safe appreciation of the results to be derived from them, and of the actual condition of the Hindus, both political and religious, at a date co-eval with that of the yet earliest known records of social organisation—long anterior to the dawn of Grecian civilisation—prior to the oldest Hebrew writings, and posterior only to the Egyptian dynasties, of which, however, we yet know little except barren names ; the Vedas give us abundant information respecting all that is most interesting in the contemplation of antiquity."

¹ Indian Philosophy, Vol. I. p. 78.

² JRAS., Vol. xiii. 1862, p. 206, quoted in the Indian Philosophy, Vol I. pp. 78-74.

The Ṛgvedic society was founded on the home and the family as well established institutions with the proper place assigned to women under an advanced system of material laws. The Ṛgvedic expression—"the wife is the home"¹ (jāyē-dastam)—shows how domestic life and sentiment centred round the woman.

The Ṛgvedic conception of womanhood at its best may well be studied in the goddesses described in this first human literary document, the Ṛgveda. The strength of the woman who ruled the household of the Ṛṣi and his Yajamāna was unconsciously reflected in the pleasing counterparts whom he created and to whom he addressed his impassioned prayers.

First in importance among the goddesses is Aditi² typifying motherhood. She is the ideal mother like Maat of the Egyptians and Themis of the Greeks. Motherhood Aditi is the essential and most characteristic trait of this divinity personifying 'a pure abstraction.'³ She is the mother of Mitra and Varuna,⁴ Aryaman,⁵ the Rudras,⁶ the Ādityas, Indra, of kings⁷ and of such other excellent sons.⁸ In later literature also Aditi's character as a mother is preserved.

¹ ṚV., III. 53, 4.

² ibid., I. 186, 3 ; 94, 15 ; 162, 22 ; 24, 1 ; 185, 3 ; 94, 15 ; 89, 10 ; 48, 2 ; 118, 19 ; 166, 12 ; 153, 3 ; II. 40, 6 ; 27, 1 and 7 ; III. 54, 10 ; IV. 1920 ; 55, 3 ; 25, 3 ; V. 46, 6 ; 69, 3 ; 2, 7 ; 59, 8 ; VI. 4, 1 ; VII. 40, 4 ; 10, 4 ; 87, 7 ; 51, 1 ; 9, 3 ; 82, 10 ; 40, 2 ; VIII. 9, 14 ; 67, 12 ; 25, 3 ; 47, 9 ; 90, 15 ; 27, 5 ; 67, 14 ; 19, 14 ; 18, 6 and 7 ; 90, 15 ; X. 36, 3 ; 132, 6 ; 72, 8 ; 100 ; 87, 18 ; 35, 2 and 3 ; 68, 2 and 3 ; 72, 4 and 5 ; 90, 5 ; 11, 1.

³ A. A. Macdonell : Vedic Mythology, p. 120.

⁴ ṚV., VIII. 25, 3 ; X. 86, 3 ; 182, 6.

⁵ ibid., VIII. 47, 9.

⁶ ibid., 90, 15.

⁷ ibid., II. 27, 7.

⁸ ibid., X. 72, 8 ; cf. AV., VIII. 9, 21.

Thus in a hymn of the *Atharva Veda*¹ and in another of the *Vājasaneyi Samhitā*² she is invoked as the great mother of the devout, the mistress of the ṛta, mighty and powerful, unaging, spacious, protecting and cleverly guiding. The *Atharva Veda*³ mentions her as even having brothers and sons. In the *Ṛgveda*⁴ itself she has been referred to as the sister of the Ādityas and as the daughter of the Vasus (duhitāvasūnām). Everywhere else in connection with the Ādityas she is mentioned as their mother and it is here alone that she is spoken of as their sister (svasāḍityānām). The class of gods called the Ādityas have their name derived from her and so naturally her relation as mother with them is most common, but since the occasion for the Ṛgvedic poet is not one of establishing genealogical connections, a serious enquiry to this end would be absolutely irrelevant. What is important to note is that wherever she has been mentioned her function has been to tenderly look after the living beings, and this is why her tie of relationship has varied according to the occasion as a mother, housewife, sister and daughter. Thus, again, it is that she is spoken of as being both mother⁵ and daughter⁶ to Dakṣa. Her epithet *pastyā*⁷ clearly alludes to her status as a housewife which may also imply motherhood.

Her motherhood gives her a natural sway over her children. It is to the mother that the child looks up for allaying its fear and the Ṛgvedic Aryan always runs to take refuge under the protection of this mother goddess Aditi. Many a time is she spoken of as protecting men from distress and danger (amhas), and as granting complete welfare or safety.⁸ In fact the poet expects Aditi to bestow on men and gods all the

¹ VII. 6, 2.

² XXI. 5.

³ VI. 4, 1.

⁴ VIII. 101, 15.

⁵ ibid., II. 27, 1.

⁶ ibid., X. 72, 4-5.

⁷ ibid., IV. 55, 8 ; VIII. 27, 5.

⁸ ibid., X. 100 ; I. 94, 15.

tender care and protection which he himself has received in his actual worldly home.

She is frequently invoked to release men from guilt or sin. This idea is clearly connected with the etymology of her name. The word a-diti literally signifies 'unbinding,' 'freedom,' 'boundlessness' and is derived from the word diti, 'binding' from dā, 'to bind.' A form of this verb (di-ta = bound) has been used to describe Śunaḥśepa 'bound' to the stake.¹ Hence it is that the goddess is besought to release her worshippers who are like tied thieves (baḍḍha).² She is invoked to make the worshippers sinless³ and to make them free from guilt towards Varuṇa in return for their conforming to her ordinances.⁴ She is further besought to expel the evil-doers from her protection and to cut them adrift from the benefit of her care.⁵ Other gods and goddesses like Agni,⁶ Savitr,⁷ Sūrya, Uṣas, Dyāvā and *Prthivī*⁸ are approached to pardon sin, but the notion of freeing from it is a function of the mother goddess Aditi and her son Varuṇa, the chief of the Ādityas, whose noose fetters the sinful. It is they that have the power of releasing men from the bonds of physical suffering and moral guilt. The Ādityas, the gods, who have derived their existence from the being of this universal mother, are invoked⁹ to place the offering in guiltlessness (anāgāstve) and freedom (adititve). Another passage¹⁰ speaks of Aditi's secure and unlimited gifts. Her trait of boundlessness is allied

¹ शुनश्चिच्छेपं निदितं सहस्राक्षपादमुञ्चो अशमिष्ट हि वः । RV., V. 2, 7.

² ते न आस्नो वृकाणामादित्यासौ मुमोचत । स्तेनं बद्धमिवादिते ॥ ibid., VIII. 67, 14.

³ अनागास्त्वं नो अदितिः कृणोतु क्षत्रं नो अस्वा वनतां हविष्मान् ॥ ibid., I. 162, 22.

⁴ ibid., VII. 87, 7.

⁵ ibid., X. 87, 18.

⁶ ibid., III. 54, 10.

⁷ ibid., IV. 54, 8.

⁸ ibid., X. 85, 2-8.

⁹ अनागास्त्वे अदितित्वे तुरास इमं यज्ञं दधतु श्रोषमाणाः ॥ ibid., VII. 51, 1.

¹⁰ अनेहो दात्रमदितेरनर्बं हवे स्वर्बदवर्धं नमस्वत् । ibid., I. 185, 8.

to Dyaus¹ and Agni.² Nature as a whole is represented by this common mother of gods and men.³ "Aditi is the heaven," says the devout Ṛṣi, "Aditi is mid air, Aditi is the mother and the sire and son. Aditi is all gods, Aditi five classed men. Aditi is all that have been born and shall be born."⁴ "Aditi", says Max Müller,⁵ "...is in reality the earliest name invented to express the infinite, the endless expanse beyond the earth, beyond the clouds, beyond the sky."

She is a giver of light (jyotiḥ) and is therefore prayed for it.⁶ The poet celebrates this imperishable, unwaning light⁷ and adores Aditi by calling Uṣas, the Dawn, her radiant face.⁸ The benefactions of Aditi are likened to the blessings bestowed by the Maruts.⁹ She is implored to bestow on her worshippers her pure, celestial, eternal gifts¹⁰ and is asked to confer wealth¹¹ on them. Her protection for men, their children and cattle is supplicated.¹²

In a few passages¹³ Aditi is identified with a cow, and in the ritual, a ceremonial cow is commonly addressed as Aditi. This notion occurs in the later Vedic texts.¹⁴ This is so because the cow to the Hindu mind even to this day typifies motherhood by providing its nourishing milk, curds, butter, etc. Both

¹ ṚV., V. 59, 8 ; X. 68, 8.

² ibid., I. 94, 15 ; IV. 1, 20 ; VII. 9, 8 ; VIII. 19, 14.

³ आदित्येभिरदिति दिव्यजन्मां . . . ibid., VII. 10, 8.

⁴ अदितिर्द्यौरदितिरन्तरिक्षमदितिर्माता स पिता पुत्रः ।

विश्वेदेवा अदितिः पञ्चजना अदितिर्जातिमदितिर्जनित्वम् ॥ ibid., I. 89, 10 ;
of. Kath. Up., IV. 7.

⁵ Vedic Hymns, SBE., 82, p. 241.

⁶ ṚV., IV. 25, 8 ; X. 86, 8.

⁷ अमृच्च ज्योतिः ibid., VII. 82, 10.

⁸ ibid., I. 118, 19.

⁹ ibid., 186, 12.

¹⁰ ibid., 186, 8.

¹¹ ibid., VII. 40, 2.

¹² ibid., VIII. 18, 6 and 7 ; I. 48, 2.

¹³ ibid., I. 158, 8 ; VIII. 90, 15 ; X. 11, 1, etc.

¹⁴ VS. XIII. 48 and 49.

represent boundless plenty and hence the expression : mā gām anāgām aditīm vadhiṣṭa.¹

Wallis² and Oldenberg³ favour the conception of Aditi as personifying freedom. Pischel,⁴ Hardy⁵ and Colinet⁶ interpret it to mean Prthivī, the Earth, or the counterpart of Dyaus, sky. This interpretation is mainly due to the fact that in the Ṛgveda Aditi is identified also with the Earth.⁷ Like the Earth she is extensive (prthivī vitasthe) and spacious, greater than the greatest (mahtā mahadbhiḥ)⁸ and far pervading (uruvyacā)⁹. mother (mātā).¹⁰ She is frequently styled as devī, which word in later classical literature signifies a goddess as well as a queen, and she bears at times the epithet anarvā,¹¹ 'intact.' "She is widely expanded,¹² extensive, a mistress of wide stalls."¹³ The Ṛgveda gives her no definite physical features and there she is the personification of a pure abstraction¹⁴, but it is significant that a prolific class of terracottas, which has been identified with the mother goddess Prithvī or Aditi by some¹⁵, likewise lacks absolutely in distinct physical features except in the Ṛgvedic trait of being 'spacious and extensive' (prthivī) and displays a pronouncedly flat front. Aditi has been further described as bright and luminous and a prop of living beings¹⁶ and,

¹ ṚV., VIII, 101, 15.

² Cosmology of the R̥gveda, p. 45, ff.

³ Die Religion des Veda, pp. 204-7 ; cf. SBE., 46, p. 329.

⁴ Vedische Studien, 2, p. 86.

⁵ Vedisch-Brahmanische Periode, p. 94.

⁶ Transactions of the 9th Oriental Conference, I, pp. 396-410.

⁷ ṚV., I, 72, 9.

⁸ ibid.

⁹ ibid., V, 46, 6.

¹⁰ ibid., I, 72, 9.

¹¹ ibid., II, 40, 6 ; VII, 40, 4.

¹² ibid., V, 46, 6.

¹³ ibid., VIII, 67, 12.

¹⁴ A. A. Macdonell : Vedic Mythology, p. 120.

¹⁵ V. S. Agrawala : Mathura Terracottas, p. 28.

¹⁶ ṚV., I, 186, 8.

as such, she belongs to all men¹ (viśvajanyām). She is invoked at morning, noon, and sunset.²

It is strange that this important goddess, whose name occurs in the R̥gveda about as many as eighty times, should be so very rarely addressed alone in a separate hymn. She is constantly invoked with her sons, the Ādityas. Perhaps the explanation may be found in the notion that this mother, the first nurse of mankind, who supplied the gods with her milk,³ could hardly exist by herself. She could not be described divorced from her function which was the tending of her children and the guiding of the affairs of the household. A mother apart from her tender motherly care of her children had no existence and hence the sage questions in childish bewilderment: "Who may give us back to the great Aditi, that I may see father and mother?"⁴

Diti⁵, who in later literature becomes the progenitor of the evil forces as opposed to the gods, is not portrayed as inimical to the aspirations of men in the R̥gveda.

Diti Still in the etymology of her name she carried the germs of the later trend which literally signified 'bound,' 'not free.' She would appear to be a counterpart of Aditi, the freeing mother. Naturally the freedom-loving Aryan did not favour her and the notion that her nomenclature implied, and consequently we find that this goddess has been mentioned only thrice⁶ in the entire range of the R̥gveda out of which twice⁷ her name occurs along with Aditi. Later, in Puranic literature, we find her identified with the mother of demons.

¹ Ṛ̥ṇ., VII. 10, 4.

² ibid., V. 69, 8.

³ ibid., X. 68, 8.

⁴ को नो मह्यो अदितये पुनर्दास्वितरं च दृश्ये मातरं च ॥ ibid., I. 24, 1.

⁵ ibid., IV. 2, 11; V. 62, 8; VII. 15, 12.

⁶ ibid.

⁷ ibid., IV. 2, 11; V. 62, 8.

Like Aditi Pr̥thivī,¹ the Earth, also has been endowed with a motherly trait. Naturally the grateful Aryan could not forget her on whose bosom he ran to and fro in childlike frolic, fought and foiled his inveterate foes and under which he was at last laid to eternal rest. To this kindly mother did the dead man go.² In the *Atharva Veda*³ a long and beautiful hymn is addressed to her which has been so ably analysed by Dr. Mookerji in his Nationalism in Hindu Culture.⁴ In the R̥gveda itself she has been frequently addressed as mother.⁵ She has been given all the physical attributes of the Earth. Abounding in great heights (balitthā) she bears the weight of the mountains (parvatānām khidram bibharṣi).⁶ She quickens the soil (bhūmim)⁷ and the showers of the heaven are caused by the lightning of her clouds.⁸ She is great and spacious (mahī),⁹ she supports the sylvan vegetation (vanaspati),¹⁰ so dear to the speculative Aryan, and is firm (dr̥ḥhā)¹¹ and shining (arjuni).¹² She was in this way the source of his life as she yielded the crops. She 'was the Cybele of the Greeks, and, like the Vedas the Homeric hymns sang of the great goddess.'¹³

Besides her exclusive motherly trait she is also conceived as a wife and her association with her husband, Dyāvā (heaven),

¹ RV., V. 84 ; I. 159 ; 160 ; 185 ; VI. 70 ; VII. 53 ; X. 18, 10, etc.

² ऊर्णम्रदा युवतिर्दक्षिणावत एषा त्वा पातु निऋतेऽस्पृष्टात् ॥ ibid., X. 18, 10.

³ XII. 1.

⁴ Pp. 20-22.

⁵ RV., I. 159, 2 ; 185, 10 ; VI. 70, 6, etc.

⁶ ibid., V. 84, 1.

⁷ ibid.

⁸ यत्ते अन्नस्य विद्युतो दिवो वर्षन्ति वृष्टयः ibid., 8.

⁹ ibid., VII. 53, 1 ; also in I. 159, 160, 185 etc.

¹⁰ ibid., V. 84, 8.

¹¹ ibid.

¹² ibid., 2.

¹³ Clarisse Bader : Women in Ancient India, p. 4 ; cf. the Homeric hymn quoted by Max Müller in his India ; What it can teach us ? p. 156—"Mother of Gods, the wife of the starry Heaven."

is so close that although her name is mentioned more than a hundred times in the Rgveda, she is exclusively adored only once¹; otherwise she always finds mention in company of her lord, the heaven. As a joint pair they have six hymns² addressed to them. The association of the two is so consummate that even where she has been addressed alone she is praised for sending the rain of heaven from her cloud³ and in this way the sense of association has been kept afresh. The dual compound Dyāvā-prthivī, with comparatively rare synonyms Dyāvā-ksāmā⁴ and Dyāvā-bhūmi,⁵ are called parents and are styled as pitārā,⁶ mātārā,⁷ janitṛi.⁸ They are also separately addressed as father and mother⁹ and are conceived as the progenitors of the gods (devaputṛe).¹⁰ They are primeval parents¹¹ (pūrvaje pitārā) and they go on breeding 'all-round wide immortality'¹² (amṛtam varīmabhiḥ). The parents begin their career of procreation in a conjugal love the legality of which is later rendered unquestionable by the poet having married the couple off in the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa.¹³ Thus we find that at the very outset of the cosmic creation the parental responsibility asserts itself and the domestic sweetness springs up spontaneously.

Dyāvā-Prthivī have created the living beings and they maintain them.¹⁴ Both are rich in seed¹⁵ (retah, retasā). Milk,

¹ ṚV., V. 84.

² ibid., I. 159 ; 160 ; 185 ; VI. 70 ; VII. 58 ; X. 65, 8.

³ यत्ते मधस्य विद्युतो दिवो वर्षन्ति वृष्टयः ॥ ibid., V. 84, 8.

⁴ A. A. Macdonell : Vedic Mythology, p. 126.

⁵ ibid.

⁶ ṚV., I. 159, 2 ; VII. 58, 2 ; X. 65, 8.

⁷ ibid., I. 159, 8.

⁸ ibid., I. 185, 6.

⁹ ibid., I. 159, 1-8 ; 160, 2.

¹⁰ ibid., I. 159, 1 ; 185, 4 ; VII. 58, 1.

¹¹ ibid., VII. 58, 2 ; X. 65, 8.

¹² ibid., I. 159, 2 ; 185, 8.

¹³ IV. 27, 5-6.

¹⁴ ṚV., I. 159, 2 ; 160, 2 ; 185, 1.

¹⁵ ibid., I. 159, 2 ; VI. 70, 1-2.

clarified butter and honey flow plentifully from them¹ and they also yield the gods' food ambrosia, amṛta.² In the manner of earthly parents tending and protecting their children they act as guardian deities guarding creatures and sheltering them from disgrace, calumny, misery and misfortune.³ They win them undying fame and glory, spacious lands and dominions and grant them nourishing food and endless riches.⁴ Due to their gender they are also alluded to as sisters.⁵

The Earth is further praised under the name of some agricultural deities, like the land⁶ (kṣetra) and the furrow⁷ (sītā). Sītā in later literature⁸ appears as the wife of Indra. This is natural as Indra is the god of rain and thunder who sends his showers and fertilizes the furrow, that is Sītā, which receives the seed and yields the crop. This is why Indra bears the epithet of urvarāpati,⁹ 'the lord of the field.' It is again natural that in the Rāmāyaṇa Rāma, meaning Indra, should have married a wife named Sītā obtained from a furrow newly ploughed by Janaka, progenitor, during a terrible draught. Sītā of the R̥gvedic context is invoked to grant rich blessings and crops.¹⁰ The Ṛṣi prays :

"Approach, thou, O fortunate Earth, surnamed Sītā. We honour thee that thou mayest be for us both propitious and fruitful....¹¹

"May Sītā yield us abundant milk for many years.¹²

¹ RV., VI. 70, 1-5.

² ibid., I. 159, 2 ; 185, 6.

³ पातामवद्यादुरितादभीके पिता माता च रक्षतामवाभिः ॥ ibid., I. 185, 10.

⁴ ibid., VI. 70, 6 ; I. 159, 5.

⁵ संगच्छमाने युवती समन्ते स्वासारा जामी पित्रोरुपस्थे । ibid., I. 185, 5.

⁶ ibid., IV. 57.

⁷ ibid., 57, 6 and 7.

⁸ Pāraskara Gṛhyasūtra, II. 17, 9.

⁹ RV., VIII. 21, 8 ; cf. IV. 57, 7.

¹⁰ यथा नः सुभगाससि यथा नः सुफलससि ibid., IV. 57, 6.

¹¹ ibid.

¹² सा नः पयस्वती दुहामुत्तरामुत्तरां समाम् ॥ ibid., 7.

“May the ploughshares successfully till the land for us ;
may our shepherds happily lead their flocks....”¹

The most beautiful conception of a goddess which the R̥gveda presents to us is that of Uṣā, the Dawn, the Indian Eos. Macdonell² writes : “Uṣas is the most graceful creation of Vedic poetry and there is no more charming figure in the descriptive religious lyrics of any other literature. The brightness of her form has not been obscured by priestly speculation nor has the imagery as a rule been marred by references to the sacrifice.” As many as twenty hymns³ are exclusively addressed to her which make up the best portion of the R̥gvedic poetry. Her name occurs in the R̥gveda more than 300 times ! She is the goddess of the dawn and so most naturally she strikes the Indian Tithonus as a resplendent and bright inspirer of life and love from the transparent blue. She is the daughter of the sky⁴ (dahitar-divah), the lady of the light⁵ (vibhāvārī rāyā) and the radiant mover of sweet sounds with wealth of horses and cows.⁶ She is conceived as a matron carefully tending everything, rousing all life, stirring all creatures that have feet and making the birds fly up.⁷ She is the breath and life of everything.⁸ She sends the busy forth, each man to his pursuit.⁹ The same like a divine protector shines foes and enmity away¹⁰ (ucchadapa-sridhah).

¹ शुनं नः फाला वि कृषन्तु भूमि शुनं कीनाशा अभि यन्तु वाहेः ।

शुनं पर्जन्यो मधुना पयोभिः शूनासीरा शुनमस्मासुधत्तम् ॥ RV., 8; also cf. ibid., IV. 4

² Vedic Mythology, p. 46.

³ RV., I. 48; 49; 92 (Uṣas and Aśvins); 119 (Uṣas and Night); 128; 124; III. 61; IV. 80; 51; 52; V. 79; 80; VI. 75-81; X. 172.

⁴ ibid., I. 80, 22; 48, 9; 2; दिवो दुहिता ibid., 92, 5; 48, 8.

⁵ ibid., 92, 14; 48, 10.

⁶ उषो अश्वेह गोमत्यश्वावति विभावरि । ibid.

⁷ आ वा योषेव सुनर्युषा याति प्रमुञ्जती । जरयन्ती वृजन् एद्वदीयत उत्पातयति पक्षिणः ॥ ibid., I. 48, 5 and 10; 49, 8.

⁸ विश्वस्य हि प्राणनं जीवनं त्वे... ibid., I. 48, 10.

⁹ ibid., 6.

¹⁰ ibid., I. 48, 8.

To the religious Aryan who could be a greater helper than Uṣā, who brought all his gods from the firmament so that they might accept his offerings ?¹ She unites men with gods² and causes Agni to be kindled.³ She awakes before the rest of the world,⁴ and just as a mistress, rising in the morning, opens the doors of her house ; so also does she dispel the darkness at the end of night and opens the gates of heaven.⁵ She quickens every creature to motion.⁶ The Dawns waken the drowsy and instil motion and vigour into the bipeds and quadrupeds.⁷ In the morning when Uṣā shows herself forth, birds take to wings and men leave their beds in quest of food and nourishment.⁸ She wakens the five tribes and reveals and illumines the path of men.⁹ She unfolds all creatures, confers fresh life¹⁰ and drives away evil dreams to Trita Āptya.¹¹ By dispelling her darkness¹² she removes the black robe of night.¹³ She drives away the despicable spirits and the detested darkness.¹⁴ The darkness of the night having been warded off the manifold treasures ensconced in it are laid bare which she now distributes bountifully.¹⁵ When she awakes in the morning the ends of the sky are lit up.¹⁶ She is herself sometimes spoken of as awakened by worshippers with their prayers.¹⁷ She is

¹ विश्वान्देवाँ आ वह सोमपीतयेऽन्तरिक्षाद्दुषस्त्वम् । RV., I. 12.

² ibid., I. 118, 9.

³ ibid.

⁴ ibid., I. 128, 2.

⁵ उषो यदद्य भानुना वि द्वारावृणवो दिवः । ibid., I. 48, 15 ; 118, 4.

⁶ विश्वं जीवं चरसे बोधयन्ती ibid., I. 92, 9 ; VII. 77, 1.

⁷ ibid., IV. 51, 5.

⁸ ibid., I. 124, 12.

⁹ व्युषा आवः पथ्या जनानो पञ्च क्षितीर्मानुषीर्बोधयन्ती । ibid., VII. 79, 1.

¹⁰ ibid., 80, 1 and 2.

¹¹ ibid., VIII. 47, 14 and 16.

¹² ibid., VI. 64, 8 ; 65, 2.

¹³ ibid., I. 118, 14.

¹⁴ ibid., VII. 75, 1.

¹⁵ ibid., I. 128, 4 and 6.

¹⁶ अपूर्वती दिवो अन्ती अबोधय स्वसारं सन्तयुयोति । ibid., I. 92, 11.

¹⁷ ibid., IV. 52, 4 ; VII. 80, 1.

invoked to arouse the liberal and the devout and to let alone the ungodly and the niggard.¹

The goddess shines like a mother bending her kind looks on all the world below.² But then because she is conceived as a woman the poet brings her down to the earth from the heaven and paints her as a real woman, charming and graceful. She is a maiden decked by her mother showing her form³, who generates motion in every living being and understands the voice of each adorer.⁴ The poet becomes more fanciful, even extravagantly inspired, when he likens her to a professional dancer (nṛtāriva) who arrays herself in gay, embroidered garments and lays bare (upornūte) her breasts (vakṣa) just as a cow yields her udder.⁵ In a most beautiful verse of delicate imagery she is described as an ancient goddess, (purāṇī) ever young, born again and again (punaḥpunarjāyamānā) decking her beauty with the self-same raiment (varṇam) and wasting away the life (jarayantyāyuh) of mortals (marttasya) in the manner of a skilled butcher (śvaghnīva) cutting birds in pieces (kr̥tnur-vija āminānā).⁶ Clothed in light, the maiden appears in the eastern horizon and unveils her maddening charms⁷ to the beholders. The immortal goddess (amṛtā) has shone in days of yore, she shines to-day and she will shine hereafter, never aging (ajarā).⁸ Like a shining silver wheel she revolves ever anew⁹ and ever "shortening the ages of men, she shines forth, ¹ R̥V., I. 124, 10 ; IV. 51, 8.

² ibid., I. 92, 9.

³ सुसङ्काशा मातृमूष्टेव योषाविस्तन्वं कृणुषे दृशेकम् । ibid., I. 128, 11.

⁴ विद्वं जीवं चरसे बोधयन्ती विश्वस्य वाचमविदन्मनायोः । ibid., I. 92, 9.

⁵ अग्निं येषांसि वपते नृत्तरिवापोणुति वक्ष सखेव वर्जहम् । ibid., I. 92, 4.

⁶ पुनः पुनर्जायमाना पुराणी समानं वर्णमभि शुम्भमाना ।

इवञ्चीव कृतनुविज आमिनाना मर्तस्य देवी जरयन्त्यायुः ॥ ibid., 10.

⁷ एषा दिवो दुहिता प्रत्यर्वाशि ज्योतिर्वसाना समना पुरस्तात् । ibid., 124, 8.

उपो अर्वाशि वांभ्यवो न वक्षो नोषा इवाविरकृत प्रियाणि । ibid., 4.

⁸ शश्वत्पुरोषा व्युवास देव्यथो अक्षेदं व्यावो मघोनी ।

अथो व्युच्छादुत्तरौ अनु दूनजरामृता चरति स्वधाभिः ॥ ibid., 118, 18 ; 118, 15.

⁹ समानमर्थं चरणीयमाना चक्रमिव नव्यस्या बवृत्स्व ॥ ibid., 61, 8.

the last of the dawns that have always gone, the first of those to come."¹ Effulgent in peerless beauty she does not give her light with discrimination but she floods the entire world, all small and great, with her brilliant torch.² Rising resplendent as from a bath, showing her charms she approaches with light, dispelling the darkness.³ This description indeed puts Tennyson's *Tithonus*⁴ into the shade both as regards rhythm as well as sublimity of ideas, while the similarity of the expression of the two poets remains striking. The Dawn is borne on a chariot which is bright⁵ (vibhāhi candrarathā) and brilliant,⁶ shining and resplendent⁷ (jyotiṣmatā), well-adorned⁸ (supēṣusum) and all adoring⁹ (śubhrā), massive¹⁰ (bṛhatā) and self-yoked¹¹ (svadhayā yuyyamānam). She comes driving in such a chariot drawn by fleeting resplendent steeds¹² of a ruddy hue,¹³ ever yoked¹⁴ and unresisting.¹⁵ The red morning clouds are said in a verse¹⁶

¹ अमिबती दैव्यानि व्रतानि प्रमिनती मनुष्या युगानि ।

ईयुषीणामुपमा शश्वतीनामायतीनां प्रथमोषा व्यद्यौत् ॥ RV., I. 124, 2.

² ibid., 6.

³ ibid., V. 80, 5 and 6.

⁴ By the strong hours indignant work'd their wills
And beat me down and marr'd and wasted me,
And tho' they could not end me, left me maimed.
Thou seest all things, thou wilt see my grave.
Thou wilt renew thy beauty morn by morn.
I earth in earth forget these empty courts,
And thee returning on thy silver wheels.

⁵ RV., III. 61, 2.

⁶ ibid., I. 28, 7.

⁷ ibid., VII. 78, 1.

⁸ ibid., I. 49, 2.

⁹ ibid., VII. 75, 6.

¹⁰ ibid., I. 48, 10.

¹¹ ibid., VII. 78, 4.

¹² ibid., V. 79, 1-10.

¹³ ibid., VII. 75, 6.

¹⁴ ibid., IV. 51 5.

¹⁵ ibid., III. 61, 2.

¹⁶ ibid., I. 92, 2 also cf. I. 124, 11 ; V. 80, 8.

to be the cows drawing her chariot. She drives in a hundred chariots¹ all at once and traverses thirty yojanas a day² (trinsātam yojanāni).

Her functions are allied to those of a matron in the agricultural Aryan home and she is frequently associated with the cattle. She unfastens the gates of darkness as the cows their stalls.³ Her radiant rays look like herds of cattle.⁴ She is discernible from a distance leading and scattering out the cattle (paśūn).⁵ "The ruddy beams fly up, the ruddy cows yoke themselves, the ruddy dawns weave their web (of light) as of old."⁶ Constant association with the cows gives Uṣā the epithet, 'mother of kine'⁷ (mātā gavām).⁸

Everyday Uṣā appears at the appointed spot and she never infringes the ordinances of order and of the gods.⁹ She is fully acquainted with her way and proceeds unerringly on the path of order.¹⁰ She is besought not to tarry but to rush forth so that the sun may not scorch her as a thief or an enemy.¹¹ She brings with her the train of gods to drink soma.¹² She makes the path for Sūrya to travel¹³ and brings this eye of the gods on the horizon and guides the spotless beautiful horse.¹⁴

¹ शतं रथेभिः RV., I. 48, 7.

² ibid., I. 128, 8.

³ ibid., I. 92, 4.

⁴ ibid., IV. 52, 2 and 4.

⁵ ibid., I. 90, 12.

⁶ ते हि वसवो वसवानास्ते अग्रमूरा महोभिः । व्रता रक्षन्ते विस्वाहा । ibid., 2.

Trans. by A. A. Macdonell : Vedic Mythology, p. 47.

⁷ Kuhn : Entwicklungsstufen, p. 181.

⁸ IV. 52, 2 and 3 ; VII. 77, 2.

⁹ अमिनती दैव्यानि व्रतानि ibid., I. 92, 12 ; 124, 2 ; VII. 76, 5 ; ऋतस्य योषा न मिनाति धामाहरह्निष्कृतमाचरन्ती ॥ ibid., I. 128, 9.

¹⁰ ऋतस्य पन्थामन्वेति साधु प्रजानतीव न दिशो मिनाति ॥ ibid., V. 80, 4.

¹¹ ibid., 79, 9.

¹² विश्वान्देवी आ वह सोमपीतयेऽन्तरिक्षादुषस्त्वम् । ibid., I. 48, 12.

¹³ ibid., I. 118, 16.

¹⁴ देवानां चक्षुः सुमगा बहन्ती इवेतं नयन्ती सुवृक्षीकमववम् । ibid., VII. 77, 8.

She gets aglow with the light of her lover¹ (jārasya), the sun.² Sūrya follows her as a young man chases a maiden,³ and then at last she accepts and meets the god who desires her.⁴ She is conceived as both his wife⁵ and mother⁶ accordingly as he follows her and she precedes him. Besides being described as daughter, wife and mother, she is also conceived as sister. She is thus the sister of Bhaga⁷ and the kinswoman of Varuṇa.⁸ Dawn and Night have been frequently alluded to in a dual compound (uṣāsānaktā or naktoṣāsā), both standing in relationship of sisters⁹ to each other, the Dawn sometimes referred to as the elder sister of the Night.¹⁰ To Dyaus Uṣā is both a daughter,¹¹ being born in the sky,¹² as well as a beloved¹³ (prīyā) because perhaps she rests in the lap of the firmament. Agni, being an aspect of the sun, has also been called her lover.¹⁴ He goes to meet the radiant Uṣā as she comes, and begs for her fair riches.¹⁵ She is also often associated with the twin gods of the early morning, the Aśvins,¹⁶ and is once connected with the moon.¹⁷

¹योषा जारस्य चक्षसा विभाति । RV., I. 92, 11.

² चक्षसा सूर्यस्य ibid., I. 118, 9.

³ सूर्यो देवीमुषसं रोचमानां मर्यो न योषामभ्येति पश्चात् ।

यत्रा नरो देवयन्तो युगानि वितन्वते प्रति भद्राय भद्रम् ॥ ibid., I. 116, 2.

⁴ RV., I. 128, 10.

⁵ सूर्यस्य योषा ibid., VII. 75, 5 ; पत्नीः सूर्यो ibid., IV. 5, 18.

⁶ ibid., VII. 78, 8.

⁷ भगस्य स्वसा ibid., I. 128, 5.

⁸ वरुणस्य जामिः ibid.

⁹ समानबन्धू ibid., I. 118, 2 ; स्वस्रोः ibid., 3 ; स्वसारमस्कृतोषसं ibid., X. 127, 8.

¹⁰ ibid., I. 124, 8.

¹¹ ibid., I. 90, 22 ; 48, 9 ; 49, 2 ; 48, 8 ; 92, 5.

¹² ibid., VII. 75, 1. cf. X. 89, 12.

¹³ ibid., I. 46, 1.

¹⁴ ibid., I. 69, 1 ; VII. 10, 1 ; cf. X. 8, 8.

¹⁵ ibid., III. 61, 6.

¹⁶ ibid., I. 44, 2 ; 188, 2 ; IV. 52, 2 and 8 ; VIII. 9, 17 ; III. 58, 1 ; X. 89, 12.

¹⁷ ibid., X. 85, 19.

The R̥ṣi often implores Uṣā to dawn upon the worshipper, to bring to him riches and progeny, to bestow protection and long life¹ and to confer fame and glory on all his liberal benefactors.² In filial joy he prays to her for motherly affection.³ While during his supplication of the goddess he visions her as receiving the soul of the dead man⁴ and as the Fathers sitting in her lap,⁵ the incubus of a sad reaction all of a sudden siezes him in an iron grip. The poet is staggered by the force of a remorseful reflection, and he wails: "How long is it since Aurora has been coming to visit us?... They are dead, the human beings who beheld the splendour of the ancient Aurora: we shall meet their fate, we who are beholding her to-day; they also will die, those who will behold the Aurora of the future."

Rātrī, the Night, is invoked in a single hymn⁶ and is styled like her sister Uṣā in the domestic epithet of the daughter of heaven⁷ (duhitardivah). Goddesses behave as sages make them do. The Aryan was gay, never pensive; that Rātrī is why even the Night does not strike abhorrence in him and, forgetting her dark aspect he visions only the bright starlit one. She is all agog with eyes, and decking herself with exceptional splendour she floods the valleys and altitudes with light and drives away darkness⁸ (jyotiṣā bādhatē tamah). At her advent men retrace their steps to their homes and birds fly back to their nests.⁹

Where Uṣā and Rātrī, the Dawn and Night, are addressed jointly as a dual compound they conjure up vivid pictures of

¹ R̥V., I. 80, 22; 48, 1.

² ibid., V. 89, 6; cf. I. 48, 4.

³ वयं स्याम मातुर्न सुतवः ॥ ibid., VII. 81, 4.

⁴ ibid., X. 58, 8.

⁵ ibid., 15, 7.

⁶ ibid., X. 127.

⁷ ibid., 127, 8.

⁸ ibid., X. 127, 2 and 8.

⁹ नि ग्रामासौ अविक्षत नि पद्वन्तो नि पक्षिणः ibid., X. 127, 5.

domestic affection. These rich goddesses,¹ the divine maidens,² are the lovely daughters of heaven.³ Sometimes Dawn and Night they are visioned as two wives⁴ abounding in milk.⁵

Once the R̥gvedic poet thinks of a maiden born, he soon imagines her growing fast into an adolescent belle, a loving housewife and an affectionate mother with breasts teeming with milk. The Dawn and the Night in like manner suckle (being co-wives) a single child who beams between heaven and earth.⁶ "They are two sisters, of one mind but of different colour, whose path is the same and endless, who, taught by the gods, move alternately and never clash or stand still."⁷ They are the radiant mothers of the eternal ordinances of Nature.⁸ They conduct every offering with bright beams⁹ and thus weave the web of sacrifice.¹⁰ They are bountiful, great and well-adorned and sit on the grass for the offering.¹¹ Appearing alternately they awaken all living creatures.¹²

Sūryā,¹³ one of the goddesses of the R̥gveda, is the typical Aryan bride. She remains to this day the Hindu ideal of a bride and it is the prayers associated with her Sūryā marriage which are generally uttered even now on the occasion of a Hindu marriage.

¹ R̥V., II. 81, 5 ; X. 70, 6.

² योषणे दिव्ये ibid., VII. 2, 6 ; X. 110, 6.

³ ibid., V. 41, 7 ; X. 70, 6.

⁴ पत्नी ibid., I. 122, 2.

⁵ ibid., II. 8, 6.

⁶ नक्तोषासा वर्णमामेभ्याने घापयेते शिशुमेकं समीची ।

द्यावाक्षामा रुक्मो अन्तर्विभाति देवा अग्निं धारयन्द्रविणोदाम् ॥ ibid., I. 96, 5.

⁷ ibid., I. 118, 8.

⁸ ऋतस्य मातरा ibid., I. 142, 7.

⁹ ibid., 41, 7.

¹⁰ तन्तुं ततं संवयन्ती ibid., II. 8, 6.

¹¹ ibid., X. 86, 1 ; 110, 6 ; I. 18, 7 ; 142, 7.

¹² ibid., VII. 2, 6.

¹³ ibid., II. 81, 5.

¹⁴ ibid., I. 84, 5 ; 116 ; 1, 17 ; 117, 18 ; 118, 5 ; 119, 5 ; IV. 48, 2 ; 49, 6 ; V. 46, 8 ; 78, 5 ; VI. 58, 4 ; 68, 5 ; VII. 68, 8 ; 69, 4 ; VIII. 8, 10 ; 29, 8 ; X. 29, I. 85, 9 and 86 ; 184, 2, etc.

Sūryā is the light of the sun which is lent to the moon with which the latter shines and this transference of light from one to the other has generated in the Aryan poet some tender, humane feelings of the hearth. The sun, where the light, Sūryā, is generated and has her abode, is conceived as her father and the moon, Soma, as her husband. A marriage¹ is arranged between Sūryā and Soma in which the Aśvins, the twin gods of the morning and evening-twilight, representing the transition of the sun's light, play the bestmen and carry the bride in their chariot to her groom.² This daughter of Sūrya³ (sūre duhitā) was given by her father over to her wooer (vadhūyu), Soma, who became her husband (patye) and it was then that the Aśvins acted as the groomsmen⁴ (varā). In another passage the gods are said to have given her to Pūṣan.⁵ Very commonly the Aśvins themselves are mentioned as Sūryā's husbands. They are called her two husbands⁶ (patī) whom she chose⁷ (vr̥ṇīta). Sūryā,⁸ the maiden⁹ (yoṣaṇā), mounted their chariot¹⁰ (ratham) or chose¹¹ (vr̥ṇīta) it. The Aśvins possess her 'as their own,¹² and carry her away in their car.¹³ She is consequently styled as Aśvinī.¹⁴ We shall have occasion later to refer to her in certain detail.

Indrāṇī, otherwise known as Śacī Paulomī, the powerful consort of Indra, personifies the Indian conception of the

¹ R̥V., X. 85, 9.

² ibid., X. 85, 9 ; 85, 26.

³ ibid., I. 84, 5 ; दुहिता सूर्यस्य ibid., I. 116, 17 ; 118, 5.

⁴ ibid., X. 85, 9.

⁵ ibid., VI. 68, 4.

⁶ ibid., IV. 48, 6 ; cf. I. 119, 5.

⁷ ibid., VII. 69, 4.

⁸ ibid., V. 78, 5.

⁹ ibid., VIII. 8, 10.

¹⁰ ibid., I. 84, 5 ; 116, 17 ; 118, 5 ; VI. 68, 5.

¹¹ ibid., I. 117, 18 ; IV. 48, 2.

¹² ibid., VII. 68, 3.

¹³ ibid., VIII. 29, 8.

¹⁴ ibid., V. 46, 8.

woman's place in the household where she reigns (ketuh, mūrdhā) as the supreme mistress.¹ She is a source of Indrāṇī strength to her husband² and the object of his whole-hearted devotion and loyalty.³ Her sons are the destroyers of enemies and her daughter is great.⁴ In a verse⁵ of striking lyrical beauty of which she is herself the Ṛṣi she declares her might and absolute sway: "I am without a rival (asapatnā), I have no longer an enemy, I triumph in destroying the passing glory (abhibhūvarā) and the fleeting riches of those women (anyāsām varco) who were desiring to eclipse me."⁶ She is a wife with several rivals (sapatnā) whom she fights and destroys.⁷

One of the most dramatic and powerful hymns of the Rgveda is uttered by Vāc, the daughter of Ambhr̥ṇa. She is herself the Ṛṣi of the hymn⁸ and is conceived Vāc as the goddess presiding over speech. In her utterance she emphatically expresses the idea of the unity of the universe. She is the force that bends the bow for Rudra that his arrow may strike and slay the hater of devotion (brahmadviṣe). She rouses and orders battle for the people and pervades heaven and earth.⁹ She it is who brings forth the father (pitaram), i.e. the sun, on the summit (mūrdhan) of the world; her dwelling is in the ocean (samudra) from where she extends over all existing creatures and touches even the far off heaven with her forehead.¹⁰ She breathes a

¹ अहं केतुरहं मूर्धाहमुग्राविवाचिनी । RV., X. 159, 2.

² येनेन्द्रो हविषा कृत्व्यभवद्युन्युत्तमः । ibid., X. 159, 4.

³ ibid., 1-2.

⁴ ममपुत्राः शत्रुहणोऽथो मे दुहिता विराट् । ibid., 8.

⁵ ibid., X. 159.

⁶ असपत्ना सपत्न्यनी जयत्यभिभूवरी । आबूक्षमन्यासां क्वो राधो अस्थेयसामिव ॥ ibid., 5.

⁷ ibid., X. 145 ; ibid., 159.

⁸ ibid., X. 125.

⁹ अहं जनाय समदं कृणोम्यहं द्यावापृथिवी आ विवेश ॥ ibid., X. 125, 6.

¹⁰ ibid., X. 125, 7.

strong breath which generates a tempest while she holds together all existence. Mighty in her grandeur she appears 'from beyond the heavens and from beyond the earth'¹ (paro divā para enā pṛthivyai). She is the Sabdabrahma of the later times pervading the entire universe and accompanying all gods² (viśvedevāḥ). She is the primeval energy of the universe, the feminine counterpart of the creating and annihilating God. Her hymn³ 'is made the basis of Śāktaism.'⁴ Sir S. Radhakrishnan interprets her as 'the energy drawing forth from Paramātman the whole universe from ākāśa downwards.'⁵ Here the conception of Vāc identified with the universal soul recalls to mind the later conception of Sīvā, who is the inseparable half of Śiva. The goddess through this hymn establishes emphatically her important position in the governance of the universe. She is conceived as the real force, the guiding feminine principle in the scheme of creation and no work of God could be accomplished without his innately wedded śakti. In a passage of the R̥gveda she has been actually called the queen of the gods, and divine.⁶

Ilā, Sarasvatī, and Bhārati are the three goddesses, who bring delight. Ilā, the rite, is the first teacher (śāsanī) of men⁷ in the rules of sacrifice. She is the first high priestess⁸ of the vedic religion. Since the clarified butter forms the chief ingredient of the offerings to gods, Ilā

¹ R̥V., X. 125, 8.

² ibid., X. 125, 1.

³ ibid., X. 125.

⁴ Indian Philosophy, p. 487.

⁵ ibid.

⁶ R̥V., VIII. 89, 10 and 11.

⁷ इळामकुर्वन्मनुषस्य शासनी. . ibid., I. 81, 11.

⁸ During the early stages of the human civilization the religious activities of men were mostly dominated by women. They were high priestesses all over the world. The Druids of Britain had three classes of Druidesses, viz. those who had their families and were appointed to carry out the duties attached to their office as priestesses of the temples ; those who were the assistants to the Druids dwelling mostly with the latter and occasionally visiting their husbands ;

has been given the epithet of 'butter-handed'¹ and 'butter-footed.'² She forms the triad with Sarasvatī and Bhārati in the Āprī hymns. She also has her motherly traits. As feeder of Agni she is his mother.³ She is also the mother of the herd (yūtha) and is connected with Urvaśī⁴ the celestial courtesan. Later she becomes the daughter of Manu,⁵ the subsequent codifier of social and religious rites, and of Mitrā-Varuṇa.⁶

Sarasvatī is the purifier⁷ (pāvakā) and the flowing knowledge—the mighty flood⁸ (maho arṇaḥ). She is the Indian

Minerva, who incites all pleasant songs and inspires
Sarasvatī and brightens all gracious and pious speculations⁹ (cetantī sumatīnām). She is the patron deity of all wisdom, imagination and invention and the protectress and lastly, those who lived in retired seclusion. The first of the above class is represented by the sisterhood at Kildare in Ireland, who devoted themselves to the service of Brigit, the goddess of poverty, medicine and smithy. The Kayans of Borneo have even to the present day preserved an interesting ceremony through which the consecrated priestess leads men and girls at a festival to the family's sacred field where she chants hymns while the men dig the land and the girls plant the rice seeds. The Dyaks also of that place had at a time women serving as the entire priestly caste. In Assam where the matriarchal system is considerably in vogue female divinities hold the religious field and in Khyrim, the high priestess or the head of the state is a woman. Women physicians occupy a very important position in the occult rites and practices of religion among the American Red Indians of the Algonquins. Likewise priestesses were held in high honour who performed the mysterious agricultural rites for ensuring excellent harvest connected with the worship of Demeter and Persephone in ancient Greece.

¹ RV., VII. 16, 8.

² ibid., X. 70, 8.

³ ibid., III. 29, 9 and 10.

⁴ ibid., V. 41, 19.

⁵ SB., I. 8, 1, 8; XI. 5, 8, 5.

⁶ ibid., I. 8, 1, 27; XIV. 9, 4, 27; Āśv. Sr. Sū., I. 7, 7.

⁷ RV., I. 8, 10.

⁸ ibid., 12.

⁹ ibid., 11.

of fine arts. In most cases she has been associated with the Brahmāvarta river of her name as we shall see later. But there is no doubt that she has also an existence distinct from the river as she forms one of the celebrated triad with Ilā and Bhāratī or Mahī which is pre-eminently a class of non-physical and moral powers.

Bhāratī,¹ one of the Āprī triad, is the all-surpassing (viśvatūrtiḥ) goddess of speech. She is the 'poetical union of gesture and voice,'² as also perhaps the personified Bhāratī offering of the Bharatas. Mahī is probably identical with her.

Hotrā,³ the holy (śuciḥ), has her male counterpart in Hotrā and Agni. She is the personified invocation, while Varutī Varutī⁴ is one who is to be chosen, the excellent.

Saraṇyū,⁵ Tvaṣṭā's daughter married to Vivasvān, is the mother of the primeval twins, Yama and Yamī.⁶ Bloomfield makes efforts⁷ to identify her with the sun-maiden Saraṇyū Sūryā or Uṣā, the Dawn, which Macdonell approves,⁸ but the identification can hardly stand scrutiny. The goddess is explained by the R̥gveda itself as the wife of Vivasvān,⁹ who is Sūrya and in later literature the story is narrated as to how the solar deity being too dazzling and hot for her, his orb had to be scraped by Tvaṣṭā, the father of the bride.

¹ RV., I. 22, 10.

² Clarisse Bader : Women in Ancient India, p. 8.

³ RV., I. 22, 10.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ ibid., X. 17, 1 and 2.

⁶ यमस्य माता ibid.

⁷ JAOS., XV. 172-88.

⁸ Vedic Mythology, p. 51.

⁹ जाया निवस्वती RV., X. 17, 1.

Sinivālī¹ and Rākā² are lunar goddesses aiding the birth of children. Guṅgū is also allied to them.³ Sinivālī is mentioned as a sister of gods.⁴ She is invoked to grant offspring.⁵ She receives particular attention by the R̥gvedic poet and is graphically portrayed as possessing an ideal feminine physique. She is broad-hipped⁶ (pr̥thustuke), fair-armed (subāhuḥ), fair-fingered (svaṅguriḥ), prolific (suṣūmā bahusūarī), a mistress of the family.⁷ In the *Yajurveda*⁸ she becomes more marked by her 'fair braids (sukapardā), beauteous crest (sukurīrā) and lovely locks (svaupasā).⁹ Perhaps it is these new features of hers added by the Yajurveda which have found favour with the pre-Mauryan clay-artist who lavishly finishes his terracotta female figurines with striking hair-coiffure of locks and braids, ample hips and slight waist. These figurines are sometimes¹⁰ identified with Sinivālī, Aditi and Pr̥thivī.

Rākā, who is invoked with Sinivālī, Sarasvatī, Dhiṣaṇā and Guṅgū, is a rich and bountiful goddess. Br̥haddivā, whose name occurs four times in the hymns to the Viśve-devās, is called a mother¹¹ and is mentioned with Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Rākā.¹²

Sunṛtā,¹³ Purandhī¹⁴ and Dhiṣaṇā¹⁵ are personified goddesses of abundance and plenty. Purandhī is identical with

¹ R̥V., II. 32 ; X. 184.

² ibid., II. 32, 7 ; V. 42, 12.

³ ibid., II. 32, 8.

⁴ देवानामसिस्वसा ibid., II. 32, 6.

⁵ ibid ; ibid., X. 184, (invoked to strengthen the foetus).

⁶ ibid., II. 32, 6.

⁷ याः सुबाहुः स्वङ्गुरिः सुषूमा बहुसूवरी । तस्यै विस्पत्यै ibid., II. 32, 7.

⁸ XI. 56.

⁹ सिनीवाली सुकपर्दा सुकुरीरा स्वोपसा ।

¹⁰ V. S. Agrawala : Mathura Terracottas, pp. 22-25.

¹¹ R̥V., X. 64, 10.

¹² ibid., II. 31, 4 ; V. 41, 19, etc.

¹³ ibid., I. 40, 8 ; X. 141, 2.

¹⁴ ibid., V. 42, 5 ; II. 31, 4, etc.

¹⁵ ibid., I. 22, 10.

Pārendi,¹ the Avestan goddess of riches and plenty. Dhiṣaṇā has been mentioned about a dozen times in the Sunṛtā, Purandhi, R̥gveda. Asumati² is the personification of the Dhiṣaṇā, spirit-life and is implored to prolong life and Asumati, Nirṛti grant strength and nourishment. Nirṛti³ presides over decay, disease, dissolution and death.

The R̥gveda refers to a number of goddesses who are nothing but personified abstractions. They are Śraddhā, Anumati, Aramati and the common Dampati. Śraddhā, Faith, is symbolical of the innate yearning for the company of Śraddhā and devotion to the gods. All offerings and processes of sacrifice must be accompanied with faith. Offerings and prayers without faith win no merit and a mere mechanical chanting of hymns is of little avail. The sage sings: "Through Faith is Agni kindled, by faith is oblation offered."⁴ All those who perform sacrifice draw near her⁵ (śraddhām upāsate) for the strength of their prayers. But the winning of Śraddhā is not an easy task. She can be pleased only by a constant longing of the heart⁶ (hṛdaya yākcūtyā). She is therefore herself besought to endow the worshipper with faith. She is said⁷ to be invoked in the morning, at noon and at night. In later literature her pedigree is traced to Sūrya⁸ and Prajāpati⁹ and 'her relationship is still further Anumati worked out in the Epics and the Purāṇās.'¹⁰ Anumati¹¹ is the personified favour of the gods. She is implored to be gracious and let her worshippers

¹ Yaṣṭi 8, 38.

² RV., X. 59, 5 and 6.

³ ibid., 1-3.

⁴ अद्वयग्निः समिध्यते अद्वया हूयते हविः । ibid., X. 151, 1.

⁵ ibid., 4.

⁶ ibid.

⁷ ibid., 5.

⁸ S.B., XII. 7, 8, 11.

⁹ T.B., II. 9, 10, 1.

¹⁰ A. A. Macdonell : Vedic Mythology, p. 119.

¹¹ RV., X. 59, 6 ; ibid., 167, 8.

long see the sun.¹ She is prayed for giving protection.² Aramati is the personified goddess of Devotion, Piety. Macdonell seeks out her counterpart in the Avesta, Aramaiti, Aramati 'a genius of earth as well as wisdom,'³ but he, however, is of opinion that 'the personification can hardly go back to the Indo-Iranian period.'⁴ Love itself is idolized, and, Dampati deified, for to the Aryan the act of procreation was something divine. To Dampati, Dampati conceived as a god and goddess, a hymn⁵ has been addressed by the lady Ṛṣi Lopāmudrā and Agastya, her spouse. It is quite in the fitness of things that Rati should have found her Ṛṣi in Lopāmudrā, who perhaps stands more for an idea than for a physical personality as her name literally signifies one whose mudrā, i.e. sign or characteristic mark (sexual ?), has become extinct, who shows little sexual instinct.

Prāṇī⁶ is another mother goddess representing the mottled storm-cloud which has been sometimes called a speckled cow.⁷

Prāṇī She is the mother of the Maruts.⁸ Aranyānī is the goddess of the woods, the sylvan vegetation. She is propitious and benevolent and never kills anybody, and men eat of the savoury fruit of her trees.⁹ This

Aranyānī queen of the wilderness, sweetly scented and redolent of balm (āñjanagandhīm surabhīm), is the mother of all forest population (mṛgāṇām mātaram) and she possesses plenty

¹ RV., 59, 6.

² ibid., 167, 3.

³ Vedic Mythology, p. 120.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ RV., I. 92, 10.

⁶ ibid., I. 28, 10; 84, 10 and 11; VIII. 6, 19; 7, 10; 58, 8; VII. 108, 6 and 10.

⁷ चिन्ता ibid., VIII. 58, 3.

⁸ उग्रा हि पुंस्त्रिमातरः ibid., I. 28, 10.

⁹ स्वादोः फलस्य जगन्नाथ यथाकर्म निपद्यते ॥ ibid., X. 146, 5.

of food even without tilling the land! (bahvannāmakṣīvalām).

A whole hymn² is addressed to her. Varuṇānī³
 Varuṇānī,
 Agnyānī is the spouse of the mighty god Varuṇa and so is Agnyānī⁴ of Agni.

Next we pass on to the fertilizing streams which have been addressed as mother goddesses by the patriotic Aryans.
 An entire hymn⁵ (Nadyo Devatā) has been addressed to them, and, besides, their names occur in several other passages. Of the river goddesses, altogether twenty-one, known and unknown, the following are prominent, namely Sarasvatī, Sindhu,⁶ Vipāśā, Paruṣnī,⁷ Asiknī,⁸ Marudvṛdhā,⁹ Vitastā,¹⁰ Ārjikiyā,¹¹
 Kubhā,¹² Krumu,¹³ Gomatī,¹⁴ Suṣomā,¹⁵ Śutudri,¹⁶
 Rivers Dṛṣadvatī, Yamunā,¹⁷ Gaṅgā,¹⁸ and Sarayū.¹⁹ References to Sarasvatī are most prolific. She is lauded in three complete hymns²⁰ of the R̥gveda and in several detached verses. The strength of her Sarasvatī current²¹ and her course²² are the constant subject of allusion. She is visioned as a dear mother and is implored not to withhold her milk.²³ She has seven

¹ आज्ञतगन्धिं सुरभिं बह्वभामकृषीवलाम् ।

प्राह्मं मृगाणां मातरमरण्यानिमशंसिषम् ॥ RV., X. 146, 6.

² ibid., X. 146.

³ ibid., I. 22, 12.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ ibid., X. 75.

⁶ ibid., X. 64, 9 ; 75, 1. 2. 4. 6.

⁷ इमं मे गङ्गे यमुने सरस्वति शुतुद्रि स्तोमं सचता परुणया ।

असिकन्या मरुद्वृधे वितस्तयार्जीकीये वृणुह्या सुषोमया ॥ ibid., X. 75, 5.

⁸ ibid. ⁹ ibid. ¹⁰ ibid. ¹¹ ibid. ¹² ibid., 6.

¹³ ibid. ¹⁴ ibid. ¹⁵ ibid., 5. ¹⁶ ibid. ¹⁷ ibid.

¹⁸ ibid.

¹⁹ सरस्वती सरयुः सिन्धुर्मुनिभिः ibid., X. 64, 9.

²⁰ VI. 61 ; VII. 95 ; VII. 96.

²¹ ibid., VI. 61, 2 and 8.

²² ibid., VII. 96, 1 and 2.

²³ पयसा मा न आ धक् ibid., VI. 61, 18.

sisters,¹ and is the mother of rivers² and goddesses,³ the very best of mothers.⁴ She is called the wife of a hero,⁵ Sarasvān,⁶ who is invoked by worshippers desiring wives and offspring, protection and plenty.⁷ She mounts the same chariot as the Fathers and comes to the sacrifice.⁸ She is a purifier⁹ and is besought to bestow wealth, progeny, immortality and vitality.¹⁰ She is also associated with the divinities assisting procreation.¹¹ She is praised for having bestowed a son named Divodāsa on Vadhryaśva.¹² As mother (ambā) she grants fame to the renowned¹³ and her unfailing breast¹⁴ yields wealth¹⁵ of every kind. By her act of granting riches, abundance and nourishment¹⁶ she has won the title subhagā,¹⁷ bountiful. She stimulates, directs and prospers the devotions of her worshippers.¹⁸ She is addressed along with the goddesses of prayer.¹⁹ She destroys the revilers of the gods²⁰ but affords shelter to her worshippers and conquers their enemies.²¹

¹ सप्तस्वसा RV., VI, 61, 10.

² अम्बितमे नदीतमे देवितमे सरस्वति ।

अपशस्ता इव स्मसि प्रशस्तिमम्बनस्कृषि ॥ ibid., II, 41, 16.

³ ibid.

⁴ अम्बितमे ibid.

⁵ वीरपत्नी ibid., VI, 49, 7.

⁶ ibid., VII, 96, 4-6.

⁷ ibid.

⁸ ibid., X, 17, 8.

⁹ पावका नः सरस्वती ibid., I, 8, 10.

¹⁰ ibid., X, 80, 12 ; II, 41, 17.

¹¹ ibid., X, 184, 2.

¹² दिवोदासं वध्र्यश्वाय दाशुषे । ibid., VI, 61, 1.

¹³ ibid., II, 41, 16.

¹⁴ ibid., I, 164, 49.

¹⁵ रत्नधा वसुविद्यः सुदन्तः ibid.

¹⁶ ibid., VII, 95, 2 ; VIII, 21, 17 ; IX, 67, 82 ; X, 17, 8-9.

¹⁷ ibid., I, 89, 8 ; VII, 95, 4 and 6 ; VIII, 21, 17.

¹⁸ ibid., I, 8, 10-11 ; II, 8, 8 ; VI, 61, 4.

¹⁹ ibid., VII, 87, 11 ; X, 65, 18.

²⁰ ibid., VI, 61, 8 and 7.

²¹ ibid., VII, 95, 4-5 ; II, 80, 8 ; VI, 49, 7.

Sacrifices are performed on her banks and on those of the Dr̥ṣadvatī.¹ Her later character as a patroness of fine arts is hinted at in the Ṛgveda itself through her association with Ilā and Bhārati where she makes up with these the triad of the Āprī hymns. In the *Vājasaneyi Samhitā*² and the *Brāhmaṇas*³ she comes to be clearly connected with Vāc, speech.

A special class of celestial women, Apsarases, have also been treated as goddesses in the Ṛgveda. They signify nymphs and are associated with water. They are, however, Apsarases mentioned only five times in the Samhitā. The Apsaras smiles at her lover,⁴ the Gandharva. Thus her association with the Gandharvas is already established and her flirting favour hinted at. Still she possesses a son like Vasiṣṭha,⁵ dwells in the highest heavens,⁶ and her path is marked out in the sky.⁷ Soon after in the *Satapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁸ the Apsarases come to be engaged in pursuits like dance, music and frivolous play where they are referred to as possessing great beauty.⁹ In the Ṛgveda their love is occasionally enjoyed by men,¹⁰ besides the Gandharvas. Only one of them, Urvaśī, is specifically named. The reference is slightly vague, nevertheless conclusive, as Vasiṣṭha at one place is called the son of Urvaśī and at another of an Apsaras.¹¹ Therefore Urvaśī must be an Apsaras, and, then, besides, we have regular allusions in later literature to Urvaśī as a celestial courtesan. There is a beautiful dialogue¹² in the Ṛgveda between this

¹ RV., III, 28, 4.

² XIX. 12.

³ S.B., III, 9, 1. 7; A.B., III, 1, 10.

⁴ अप्सरा जारमुपसिष्याणा RV., X. 128, 5.

⁵ ibid., VII, 38, 12.

⁶ योषा बिभ्राति परमे व्योमन् ibid., X. 128, 5.

⁷ ibid., 128, 6.

⁸ XI. 1.

⁹ ibid., XIII. 4, 3, 7-8.

¹⁰ X. 95, 9.

¹¹ ibid., VII. 38, 11-12.

¹² X. 95.

nymph and Pururavas, her earthly lover and spouse. The story is further narrated in the *Satapatha Brāhmaṇa*¹ and romantically worked out by Kālidāsa in his celebrated play entitled the Vikramorvaśī.

The rôle played by the goddesses in the R̥gveda, the earliest literary document of mankind, is of singular importance, although Macdonell thinks otherwise.² It is true that they are not so terrific and warring as their divine spouses or sons, but this is simply because they have been endowed with the tender traits of a woman tending the hearth. Gods are the real Aryan men, fighting and vanquishing their enemies, while goddesses are women abounding in virtues of the heart. It is not logical to show that they are insignificant simply because in many cases the names have been formed by feminine endings of those of their spouses, nor is it wise to judge them by statistical standards. It is enough that the Aryans could seldom conceive of a god without conceiving of a corresponding goddess. Even the satanic Vṛtra is given a mother Dānu.³ In fact anything that sounded feminine to the ear became a goddess to the respectful Aryan. Indrāṇī, commanding her household, is the all powerful source⁴ of the strength of her husband Indra. The vigour of Vāc is unparalleled not only in other religious literatures of the world but even in the later Sanskrit literature itself. Uṣā is the most tender and mighty conception of the human mind. She is the veritable dawn of poetical genius. Aditi is the progenitor of the entire universe and the great gods, and Pṛthivī is more important than Dyaus, her husband. All the fine arts are the sphere of the goddesses over which Sarasvatī presides. Prayers become the personified goddesses, and though they are addressed to gods, the sacrifice is prosided over by goddesses. Gods alone are not the guests at the sacrifice. Oblations are ready, gods are awaited and the Ṛṣi prays to Agni,

¹ XI. 5, 1.

² Vedic Mythology, pp. 51, 124.

³ RV., I. 82, 9.

⁴ येनेन्द्रो हविषा कृत्यमवद्युन्युत्तमः ibid., X. 169, 4.

their harbinger, to bring them to the soma draught, but not alone. Their wives must also accompany them, for it is not the organizer of the sacrifice alone that invokes them but also his wife, and most naturally therefore the goddess must figure along with her lord. Hence the sage croons the prayer: "Unite them, Agni, with their dames" (patnīvataskṛdhi). This sort of invocation is not an exception but very nearly the rule in the Ṛgveda. Neṣṭar is invited with his consort to the sacrifice and Agni is asked to bring the willing spouses (patnī-rīhā) of the gods.¹ Again Agni is besought to bring Hotrā, Bhāratī, Varutrī and Dhiṣaṇā², and the presence of a whole host of goddesses with great ardour and devotion is invoked.³ The list is not yet exhausted and Indrāṇī, Varuṇāṇī and Agnyāṇī are invited for weal to drink the soma juice.⁴

But it may be remarked that the Ṛgvedic goddess was never too free. Just as the wife in the earthly home of the Ṛṣi commanded her household like an imperious matron, always under the protection and watch of the kind loving husband, so also did her divine sister behave under her lord in the Heaven. Even the Dawn, the freest and the most wilful, is conceived as the mother of a mighty son, the daughter of a great father and the beloved of a brilliant adorer. The most haughty Indrāṇī herself has a powerful Indra for her husband. Thus it is clear that in the spiritual sphere, which was more important for the devout Aryan than the secular one, the part played by the woman was deeply permeating.

¹ अग्ने पत्नीरिहा वह देवानामुशती स्य ।

त्वष्टारं सोमपीतये ॥ RV., I. 22, 9.

² आ गन्ता अग्न इहावसे होत्रां यविष्ठ भारतीम् ।

वरुणीं धिषणां वह ॥ ibid., 10.

³ ibid.; ibid., 11-18.

⁴ ibid., I. 22, 12.

CHAPTER II

THE MAIDEN

Rgvedic Aryans were a race devoted to home. Affection was deeply rooted in their heart. Wife and children were their anxious concern who received all their love and care. Aryans had colonized a foreign land held and owned by a powerful and civilized race and were easily outnumbered by their enemies. They must have very often felt for and deprecated the comparative dearth of men and their consequent desire for more warriors was but natural. We find a very frequent longing for a male child¹ in the Rgveda. In such

Daughter—her place in the household a state the importance of the woman becomes singular and the birth of a daughter as potential mother is not altogether unwelcome. It is surprising, however, that no desire for the birth of a daughter is ever expressed in the entire range of the Rgveda. Her birth is even deprecated in the Atharva Veda.² In this Samhitā references are made to mystic charms for undoing the effect of a female foetus and for changing it into a male one.³ The *Āitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁴ preserves an ancient gāthā in which a daughter has been characterized as a misery (krpaṇam). But, nevertheless, we find frequent references in the Rgveda to daughters being fondly caressed and affectionately brought up by parents. They were lovingly treated by their mothers and shielded by the strength of their father and brother. A simile has been drawn upon the relations of the female children with their parents to express the Heaven and Earth: "Faring together, young, with meeting limits, twin sisters (svasārā jāmī) lying on their parents' bosom⁵ (pitrorupasthe)."⁵ What a

¹ I. 91, 20; 92, 18; III. 1, 23; X. 85, 25. 41. 42. 45.

² VIII. 6, 25; VI. 11, 8.

³ VI. 11; III. 23.

⁴ VII. 15.

⁵ संगच्छमाने यूवती समन्ते स्वसारा जामी पित्रोवपस्थे । RV., I.185, 5.

contrast the daughter was to her Arabian sister, who met her death through burial. Before the appearance of Muhammad the horrible practice of burying alive of female infants prevailed among the Arabs. Perhaps prompted by some savage superstition, and certainly for economic and martial reasons, the cruel custom was indulged in upto the time of the prophet, who denounced it. "Kill not your children for fear of impoverishment," said he, "we will provide for them and for you : verily their killing is a great sin."¹ In the Rg-veda we read the existence of the son and the daughter side by side, the former taking to the profession of the father while the latter inheriting the glory and honour² of her mother. Here the reference to the daughter receiving honour is one to her potential motherhood. Since the wife and mother were held in high regard, as we shall see later, the daughter also received her due share in the respect and love of her people. It is one desire of the couple to reach their full extent of life with sons and daughters³ (putriṇā tā kumāriṇā) growing by their side. In another passage⁴ a father is commended for having many excellent daughters as his quiver for containing unfailing darts, both being effective in assailing the hearts of men. We have several allusions to daughters fondly nourished in their parents' family and even growing old (amājūriṇa) while staying there.

The young girl was called by the name duhitṛ,⁵ which term, denoting daughter, is found in almost all the Aryan

¹ Qoran, Ch. XVII.

² शासद्वह्निर्दुहितुर्नैपत्यं गाद्विद्वौ ऋतस्य दीधितिं सपर्यन् ।

पिता यत्र दुहितुः सेकमृञ्जन्तसं शम्येन मनसा दधन्वे ॥

न जामये तान्वो रिक्थमारैक्चकार गर्भसंनिधुनिधानम् ।

यदी मातरो जनयन्त बह्निमन्यः कर्ता सुकृतोरन्य ऋन्धन् ॥ RV., III. 81, 1-2.

³ पुत्रिणा ता कुमारिणा विश्वमायुर्चरन्तुतः । ibid., VIII. 31, 8.

⁴ बह्वीनां पिता बहुरस्य पुत्रश्चिश्चा कृणोति समन्तावगत्य ।

इषुधिः सङ्काः पूतनाश्च सर्वाः पृष्ठे निनद्धो जयति प्रसूतः ॥ ibid., VI. 75, 5.

⁵ ibid., III. 81, 1, 2, etc.

languages. The etymology of her name indicates her principal duty in the R̥gvedic family, namely the milking of the cow. S. C. Sarkar, following Delbrück¹ and the editors of the Vedic Index,² interprets her name as 'the potential nourisher of a child'³ which interpretation is hardly tenable. Her association with milk and its other preparations is brought out in several instances. Sisters of priestly ministrants (jāmayo adhvarīyatām) mingle their sweetness with the milk (pr̥icātīrmadhunā payaḥ). The joyous maiden is beheld where the butter flows⁴ (rīyate ghr̥tamā). Thus milking of the cow and preparing clarified butter and curds seem to have been her chief concern. Besides tending the cow she had some other duties to perform. She had to do the work of the spinstress and she wove cloth (tantum) and embroidered garments.⁵ Since women in general are referred to as sewing their mantle (sīvyatvapah) with a never-breaking needle⁶ (sūcyācchidyamānayā), girls also, as now, must have been employed in needlework. They brought water in jars⁷ (udakam kumbhinīriva) from wells and watched the standing crops of the fields.⁸ The custom of girls watching fields endured till the end of the classical period and has been referred to by Kālidāsa in his *Raghuvamśa*⁹ where girls watch fields of paddy and sugarcanes and sing the panegyrics of Raghu as they do so.

Thus we find that the maiden was mainly occupied with the domestic work. But it must be noted that material cares alone were not her lot and that she also received a liberal

¹ Ind. Ver., p. 454.

² Vol. I, p. 371.

³ Some Aspects of the Earliest Social History of India, p. 104.

⁴ विसृजता ददुषे रीयते धृतमा RV., I. 185, 7.

⁵ तन्तुं ततं संवयन्ती समीची यज्ञस्य पेशः सुदुषे पयस्वती । ibid., II. 3, 6.

⁶ सीव्यत्वपः सूच्याच्छिद्यमानया ददातु वीरं शतदायमुक्थ्यम् । ibid., 32, 4.

⁷ तास्ते विषं विजञ्जिर उदकं कुम्भिनीरिव ॥ ibid., I. 191, 14.

⁸ ibid., VIII. 80.

⁹ इक्षुच्छायनिषादिन्यस्तस्य गोप्तुर्गुणोदयम् ।

आकुमारकथोदात्तं शालिगोप्यो जगूर्यशः ॥ iv. 20.

education, for, side by side with men R̥ṣis, lady seers have also been credited with the composition of hymns as we shall see in due context. The affection that was bestowed on the maiden by her relatives and the place of importance that she enjoyed in the family would make Zimmer's¹ exposure of children a myth.

Apart from her parents, her brother had some control over the maiden. This was bound to be for he was soon to occupy the place of the paterfamilias after the death of his father. He therefore looked after the social relation of his sister. He was a companion of hers and thus a great help, her chief support as his name bhrātṛ, the root of which may be traced in almost all the Indo-European languages, signifies. It was therefore feared that a free girl in the absence of a brother might go astray² and that gallants might take advantage of her helplessness.³ Naturally the brother and sister were best acquainted with each other in the family. Sarkar⁴ therefore thinks that *jñātī*⁵ primarily meant brother and sister. Her claim to the protection which she required in her weakness is well recognised in the R̥gveda. The R̥ṣi implores: "As a virtuous maiden, who lives with her father and mother, and expects from them the support to which her devotion to them gives her the claim, as such I come to ask thee for a share in thy favour."⁶

It will be well to consider here the legal status of the daughter. The evidence on this point is slightly conflicting and not quite conclusive as may well be supposed from the nature of the work. It would seem that she had some share

¹ Alt. Leb., pp. 819-20; cf. Delbrück: Ind. Ver., p. 595; Weber: Ind. Stud., p. 5, 54, 260, etc. quoted in the Soc. His. of Ind., p. 105.

² अभातरो न योषणो व्यन्तः पतिरिषो न जनयो दुरेवाः ।

पापासः सन्तो अनृता असत्या इवं पदमजनता गभीरं ॥ R̥V., IV. 5, 5.

³ ibid.

⁴ Asp. of Soc. His. Ind., p. 77.

⁵ R̥V., X. 117, 9.

⁶ Wilson: R̥gveda. Vol. II. n. 257.

in the property of her father inasmuch as she was allowed as an unmarried daughter of the family not only to stay with her parents and brothers, but even to grow old¹ (jūryanti) in her father's family. The *Atharva Veda*² even refers to daughters remaining in the parental family until death. Unless she had some share in her father's property in her own right, it is difficult to comprehend how her long stay in the family was not resented. The stay of a maiden in her father's family until she is married may be considered her birth right exercisable in any situation of life but her residence there until old age, or death, or even after her marriageable age is passed, would indicate the existence of such privileges in her favour as in certain cases would bind her almost perpetually to her father's family and permit her to enjoy its pleasures not as an act of paternal bounty but in her own right. Thus her maintenance was her legal right and a charge on her father's property. It ceased to have an effect only when she severed her connection from her paternal family after her marriage. But if she chose to remain unmarried all her life she could yet depend on her right of maintenance in the family she was born into.

Mention is made about the wealth being given away by the spouse's brother³ (syālāt) to his brother-in-law. This is a clear reference to dowry and would go a long way to prove the girl's right in the ancestral property. Wealth thus dowered passed to her as her separate property, the strīdhana of later times. An unmarried daughter had her own ornaments which she could dispose of as she liked.⁴ It was at the time of marriage generally that she gave away riches and ornaments (śāmulyam, bhājā, vasu) to Brahmins.⁵ This was evidently another item of the strīdhana.

¹ RV., I. 117, 7; अमाजू: ibid., II. 17, 7; X. 89, 8.

² I. 14, 8.

³ अश्वर्वाहि भूरिवा वत्तरा वां विजामातुस्त वा वा स्वालात् । RV., I. 109, 2.

⁴ परा वेहि सामुल्यं ब्रह्मभ्यो विभज्जा वसु । ibid., X. 85, 29.

⁵ ibid.

The brother, a father's legitimate son—of the body (tānva)¹—was the sole inheritor of the ancestral property, and in a passage of the *R̥gveda*² he is even referred to as leaving no share of that property to his sister. But this very allusion would indirectly show that in the absence of her brother she inherited the property of her father in her own right and not through her son, though her son also elsewhere³ has been made the heir to the property of his maternal grandfather. The latter case refers to a different context when the daughter had become a mother. The former reference would clearly place the claim of the daughter to her father's property over adopted and such other sons or over other cognate relations. As a matter of fact the idea of adoption was abhorrent⁴ to the R̥gvedic Aryan. There is another allusion in which it is said that 'many a maid is pleasing to the suitor who fain would marry for her splendid riches.'⁵ Here is a clear evidence of inheritance of the ancestral property on the part of the daughter in her own right before her marriage. Naturally a plethora of suitors would be attracted to such a rich girl and they would vie with each other to win her love. Even if there were any disqualifications, such as lack of charms, education or culture, attaching to the person of the bride their effect would be easily overcome by the corresponding attraction of money. Indeed, otherwise the job to find a husband would not be easy for a maiden lacking in worth and accomplishments particularly in a free society like the R̥gvedic one where girls vied with each other to gain a husband. To such a girl wealth would prove a sure assistance as there was naturally no dearth of needy young men, who would fain marry her 'for her splendid riches' (panyasā vāryeṇa).⁶ For one who was gifted with both worth

¹ R̥V., III. 81, 2.

² ibid.

³ ibid., 1.

⁴ न शेषो ग्रन्थे अन्यजातमस्त्यचेतानस्य मा पथो वि दुःखः ॥ ibid., VII. 4, 7; cf. ibid., 8.

⁵ कियतो योषा मर्यतो बधूयोः परिप्रीता पन्यसा वार्येण । ibid., X. 27, 12.

⁶ ibid.

and wealth the period of wooing would have been one of enough pride and flirtation. It has been asserted that for such a maiden it was easy to find a 'friend'—a lover and prospective husband—among the people.¹

The above discussion may show that the daughter had an assigned share in the property. A few more points may be mentioned in this connection. Verse III, 81,2 has already been referred to above. It reads: "The son left not the portion to the brother, he made a home to hold him who should gain it."² This makes it clear that a person was at liberty to leave his share in the property to his daughter and to his son-in-law through her in defiance of his brother. This would be contrary to the principle of the Hindu Mitākṣarā Law which awards such share to the nearest cognate relation of the father in a joint family. It is obvious that the Ṛgvedic system was more alive to the rights and susceptibilities of the woman. Another passage in the *Ṛgveda*³ points out that the daughter's son could succeed to the property of his maternal grandfather and thus a 'sonless man gained a grandson through his daughter.'

The maiden enjoyed singular freedom which may appear almost exceptionable to the modern Hindu accustomed to impose endless restrictions upon his women. Seclusion of Freedom women was absolutely unknown, and the maiden was free to move anywhere she liked. She appeared gay and smiling on festive occasions and tournaments (samana).⁴ The Samanas, which were generally tournaments where the horse and chariot racing⁵ was the special feature by the day, specially attracted the maidens by night. There in the brilliant torch light⁶ they appeared, duly decked

¹ भद्रा वधूर्भवति यत्सुपेशाः स्वयं सा मित्रं वनुते जने चित् । ṚV., X, 10, 12.

² न जामये तान्वो रिक्थमारैक्वकार गर्भं सनितुनिष्ठानम् । ṚV.

³ III, 81, 1.

⁴ ibid., I, 48, 6 ; 124, 8 ; IV, 58, 8 ; VII, 2, 5 ; 9, 4 ; X, 86, 10.

⁵ ibid., X, 168, 2.

⁶ सुसन्दृशा भानुना यो विभाति ibid., VII, 9, 4.

and amorously smiling¹ (smayamānāso) and there they sometimes spent the whole night.² The most striking feature of the samana was the wooing of lovers.³ Such unrestrained freedom was naturally not always desirable and made the maiden at times daring enough to elope with her lover.⁴ She made appointments and kept them. Her open meetings with her lover at trysts⁵ made her bold enough to secretly receive her paramour at night in her own chamber.⁶ Freedom of this sort was sure to result in occasional moral laxities.

The daughter in a R̥gvedic family was thus not a meek, shy and weak creature like her modern representative in the Hindu family, but she was bold, free, and strong. The maiden was an individual with a distinct personality that thought and acted. The graceful dignified wife that she was later destined to be must need have a proper beginning and even during her early adolescence she proved beyond doubt that she was worthy of the responsibility with which she was soon to be entrusted. In the R̥gvedic family the status of the wife and mother was one of remarkable importance and so the society gave to its maiden the proper degree of boldness which was expected to generate in her a sweet yet imperious temper which was necessarily required for the command⁷ and management of a household ringing with the activities of free men and working slaves.⁸

¹ R̥V., IV. 58, 8.

² ibid., I. 48, 6; cf. X. 69, 11.

³ ibid., VII. 2, 5.

⁴ ibid., I. 112, 19; 116, 1; 117, 20; X. 89, 7; 65, 12.

⁵ जारिणीव ibid., X. 84, 5.

⁶ ibid., I. 184, 8.

⁷ ibid., X. 85, 46.

⁸ ibid., I. 126, 8; V. 47, 6; VI. 27, 8; VII. 18, 22; VIII. 19, 86; 68, 17; cf. ibid., I. 18, 1; 112, 11.

CHAPTER III

MARRIAGE

Marriage was a flourishing institution in the Ṛgvedic society. It was almost a natural need. In the whole range of the Ṛgveda there is not the slightest indication of its evolution or establishment through the human agency. The *Mahābhārata*¹ refers to a period in the history of mankind when the woman was approached by man whenever he felt the urge to mate. This epic preserves legends which depict evidently the life of an age much anterior to that envisaged by the Ṛgveda and which warrant the existence of an anarchic condition of the society before marriage got the recognition of an established social institution. The Ṛgveda knows of no such historical development. The institution had taken root long before the hymns were composed and the memory of the Ṛgvedic poet could not recall to itself the age when marriage had not yet become binding on men and women or even conceive a period when marital ties were loose. Already it had been given a religious sanctity and was performed under an elaborate system of rites. The married state of an individual alone was normal and the Ṛṣi dwells at length on the happiness of the couple bound through a sacre- mental wedlock.

There is no doubt about the fact that marriage was evolved at a considerably advanced stage of human civilization. It is to some extent an incident of culture. If the Ṛgveda, as a literary document, was composed in the second millennium before Christ, as is generally held, it can be shown that marriage as a well established and flourishing institution had already become a common feature of the day. During the age of the Ṛgveda and about five centuries earlier Egypt was a land where marriage was obtaining well ; and we know that both the king and the queen were objects of adoration in the land of the Nile. The pyramids

¹ Vide the legends regarding Śvetaketu and Dirghatamas in Mbh., I, Ch. 122, vs. 4724-25 ; and ibid., Ch. 104, v. 4202ff. respectively.

Marriage disclose mummies of both the sovereign and his wife together with the valuable objects which had been kept there to form some of the amenities that they had enjoyed during their eternal rest. There is only one civilization yet known which is supposed to be anterior to that represented by the great royal dynasties of Egypt. This is the chalcolithic civilization of the Indus valley the vestiges of which have been recently laid bare by the spade from the mounds of Harappa and Mohenjo-Daro. The antiquities that have been unearthed at those sites undoubtedly give ample testimony to the existence of a highly developed material civilization which had never been equalled anywhere in the ancient world of Egypt, Assyria, Akkad and Elam. But we are not sure if marriage had become an established institution there. The inscriptions of the Indus valley are being deciphered by many scholars and the future might crown their efforts with success and throw some light on the institution of marriage.

It is commonly held by anthropologists that birds and monkeys show a natural tendency to stick to a single mate and to cohabit exclusively with it for a considerable period of time. The small home-sparrows may be commonly witnessed in dwelling houses living in the happiness of family life. It is said therefore that man learnt to live in company of a single woman in imitation of birds and monkeys. Surely then in its crude unattractive form it may have come into existence much prior to the chalcolithic age and the rituals and sacraments may have grown round it as Beginning man evolved his religious tendencies, although it must be remembered that the primitive man was in no way less gifted in his love for rituals than his descendents. In fact the occult practices of some of the primitive tribes are an exceedingly interesting subject of study. So when marriage had already become an established custom during the second and third millennia before Christ its origin indeed in that case must be dated very much earlier. It may have originated some time in the beginning of the chalcolithic age or even earlier. It is natural therefore that the seers of the Ṛgveda should not refer to a condition of life when the custom of marriage had not yet taken a definite shape. But the epic-Purāṇas, as we shall see later, do preserve such traditions—two have already been quoted above from the Mahābhārata—as depict a society in which matrimony is not yet definitely established. These traditions may have been current much earlier; and it is even possible that the Ṛgvedic seers may have known them but a reference to them would not be called for because of the nature of the work. It is not that the Ṛgveda lacks in allusions to historical incidents: as a matter of fact, it does refer to such events and we shall have occasions to discuss a few of them, but the point is that the want of a possible context may have been lacking and thus an omission may have been the result.

However, the society of the Ṛgveda had advanced to a remarkable degree where marriage had already come to be regarded as an unavoidable social or even religious sacrament which every Ārya had to undergo. The social and family ties of mother and father, brother and sister, son and daughter, mother-in-law and father-in-law, daughter-in-law and son-in-law, brothers-in-law, uncle and nephew and other cognate and agnate relationships had grown up to such an admirable degree that marriage was bound to become the basis of a permanent and an unseverable union and a sought-after necessity.

As it has already been mentioned above, marriage was considered important due to several reasons. The chief of these reasons was the Aryan occupation of India.

Importance of Marriage

The enemies were far greater in number and the land was unknown. The material prayer therefore arose: 'May the husband be the eleventh male member of the family, the rest ten being his sons.¹ In Athens and Sparta, in the latter especially, in like manner free men were outnumbered by the slaves brought from distant conquered lands and the result was woeful. Not only that the masters dwelling in perpetual awe had to live the life of an over ready soldier but that corruption followed and the purity of blood of a free man began to be questioned. The Indo-Aryan was more concerned about preserving the purity of his blood and was wiser in handling his slaves. Every Ārya seems to have taken a vow to add at least ten men to the existing number of males in his tribe. This could be properly done through a permanent wife alone. Secondly, the zeal to preserve the purity of blood itself was a reason that favoured the institution of marriage where one woman was to associate and be intimate with one man alone. Thirdly, in the religious belief where the worship of the manes is indispensable the need of a male child plays an important part and becomes imperative. He was needed at the time when his father, the Ārya, worn out by perpetual strife and struggle, terminated his martial existence and lay still. He took from the hand of the dead hero the bow² and the quiver with the responsibilities and duties that their acceptance entailed on the new man. It was a queer legacy—not of wealth and riches and of consequent pleasure but of peril and war and of eventual hardship and pain. Lastly, the nomadic life being over, there arose the urge of a permanent abode and a settled home. A settled home was the necessary outcome of a well administered household. Here it was that the need of a permanent companion asserted itself. Here was felt the want of an imperious mistress who could command the household (gārhapatyāya)³ including the bipeds and the quadrupeds⁴ and who could be an empress (samrājñī) unto her

¹ दशस्यो पुत्रानां वेहि पत्तिमेकादशं कृधि ॥ RV., X. 85, 45.

² चतुर्हस्तादाददानो मृतस्यास्ते क्षत्राय वर्चसे बलाय । ibid., X. 18, 9.

³ ibid., 85, 27, 85.

⁴ द्विपदे च चतुष्पदे ibid., 85, 49, 44.

father-in-law and the sisters-in-law.¹ Here a real woman was the need who could throw in her lot unreservedly with her man and not one who would prove only a time-server and a possible deserter. Hence the marriage, which sought to fuse two hearts together by enjoining upon the couple the importance of perfect self-abnegation and which annihilated altogether the sense of individual aloofness through absolute self-surrender, was a socio-religious necessity.

It has been already pointed out that the maiden enjoyed considerable freedom the degree of which would become a matter of grave concern to the elders of the modern Hindu community. She was free to go about in the society and join in all social functions.² The samanas, to which a reference has been made above, attracted maidens of all ages. Here they moved in company of their lovers.³ It was in fact a place where lovers met and it thus proved a tryst. Maidens flocked here in great numbers to find a husband.⁴ Suitors wooed⁵ their future wives on this spot and maidens approached it after properly decorating themselves with a view to marriage.⁶ It is interesting to note that the samana was not an institution which had grown undesired and it was not the mere result of the free frolic of riotous youth but it had the support of the entire society and the elders never resented its existence although it must have aided the casual moral laxities in the community as such a free institution is bound to do. It proved to be a place where the difficulties of marriage were spontaneously removed. This lessened very much the worry of the parents about finding a match for the daughter as occasions multiplied in favour of the daughter

¹ सम्राज्ञी स्वशूरे भव सम्राज्ञी स्वश्वरं भव ।

ननान्दरि सम्राज्ञी भव सम्राज्ञी अवि देवेषु ॥ RP., X. 85, 46.

² ibid., IV. 58, 8 ; VI. 75, 4 ; VII. 2, 5 ; X. 86, 10.

³ AV., II. 86, 1 ; cf. RP., VII. 2, 5 ; IV. 58, 8.

⁴ RP., VII. 2, 5.

⁵ ibid., IV. 58, 8 ; VII. 2, 5.

⁶ ibid.

seeking her helpmate. The qualities and drawbacks were naturally adjusted for, men and women of different tastes¹ met here and very easily a shortcoming with one became an accomplishment with another. Therefore the attendance of maidens at the samanas was even encouraged by the elders of the family and we have a reference to the mothers decorating² their daughters for attending them with a view to matrimony. Kaegi evidently gives the picture of a lively samana when he says: "Wives and maidens attire themselves in gay robes and set forth to the joyous feast; youths and girls hasten to the meadow when forest and field are clothed in fresh verdure, to take part in the dance. Cymbals sound, and seizing each other lads and damsels whirl about until the ground vibrates and clouds of dust envelop the gaily moving throng."³ On such festal gatherings and similar other occasions, which were very frequent, there were often opportunities of forming acquaintance between young men and maidens which, when matured, resulted in wedlock.

In a society, such as the R̥gvedic, marriage by free choice would without doubt be normal. Ordinarily the young maiden was free to choose the man with whom she should unite her lot. Yet her freedom was slightly qualified by parental advice. It was the duty of the father or, in his absence, of the brother, to assist the maiden to obtain a worthy husband. The brother, who was a great support of his sister as his name bhrātṛ would suggest, seems even to have had a little control over his sister's social habits and movements; for, it is suggested in the *R̥gveda*⁴ that in his absence a sister was likely to go astray in her youth (abhrātaro na yoṣaṇo vyantaḥ) and so he had to be watchful

¹ Kālidāsa makes an interesting reference to the difference of tastes among men and women in matters of matrimony in his phrase भिन्न रचिहि लोकः Raghu., vi. 80.

² सुसङ्काशा मातृमृष्टेव योषाविस्तन्व कृणुर्वे दुशेकम् । RV., I. 128, 11.

³ The R̥gveda, p. 19

⁴ IV. 5, 5.

lest bad men should take advantage of his sister's weakness. In the absence of both the father and the brother the maiden had to be bold and to turn to men to seek out her husband¹ (abhrāteva pum̐sa eti). "She seeketh men," sings the seer, "as she who hath no brother mounting her car as't were to gather riches."²

It is, however, to be noted that in spite of all this freedom the sanction of the parents, if they were living, was almost imperative. It looks difficult to believe in the face of the extraordinary freedom enjoyed by women, but it is almost an established truth, that normally the father or brother sought out a suitable match for the girl. This custom to-day has degenerated into a passive and indifferent interest on the part of the girl or boy in the event of her or his own marriage but in the freer atmosphere of the R̥gvedic times it was a veritable blessing on the society, otherwise too free a choice of husband by a girl would have resulted in nothing else than a mere matehunting. This may be witnessed as obtaining in consequence of such freedom in certain parts of the modern world where every couple starts anew and alone, although the way is too dark and difficult for individual experiments. The modern delusion of looking at marriage as an individual affair is, of course, the essence of the selfish, egocentric habit of life. It focuses desire on personal adventure and personal needs. With more courage to face the realities of love we should have a surer ideal. There should be less sentimentality but much deeper feeling about marriage. Kālidāsa, a later exponent of Indian culture following the earlier traditions of the Vedas, defines conjugal love as bhāva-bandhana prema,³ love which springs up from a conscious, responsible feeling of affection and not from a selfish and sensuous appetite. "To leave men and women unguided," says Hartley, "with their own ideas of what is good to do and

¹ RV., I. 124, 7.

² अन्नातेव पुंस एति प्रतीची गर्तागिव सनये धनानाम् ।
जायेव पत्य उवासी सुवासा उवा हृत्तेव नि रिणीति अप्सः ॥ ibid.

³ Raghu., iii. 24.

what is evil, is the dry-rot very surely destroying the ideal of marriage....No longer must marriage be regarded solely as a personal relationship. Marriage is a religious duty." So was it with the Rġvedic Aryan. To him it was not a happiness in itself; it was a means to an end. He had an ideal, and man and woman both jointly walked up to that solemnly. Marriage was a discipline, it was not an adventure. This is why the hand of the father controlled the marriage of his daughter to some extent.

The Rġvedic Aryan knew well what would happen if inexperienced girls were left to seek out their match without restraint or guidance so he always strove to find out a suitable husband for his daughter. This truth has of late been realized by some modern thinkers of the west. An authoress of considerable repute suggests an injunction. She observes: "It would, I am certain, lessen the chance of endless unhappiness in marriage and prevent many divorces if some more fixed enquiries, within the case of any one (shall I say, under twenty-five) the consent of one parent of either party, if living, if not, that of a guardian were obligatory before the marriage could be entered into....If we desire really to preserve marriage let us treat it with seriousness. Marriage is not considered a vocation, it has become a game."

The idea embodied in the above quotation had found favour to a great extent in the Indo-Aryan community. We read of marriages being normally stopped where parents objected to them. When Śyāvāśva, the son of a priest, begs of King Rathavīti, son of Darbha, the hand of the princess, his daughter, the queen objects to the match as her ideal of a son-in-law is one who is a poet and the consent, therefore, is refused. Consequently the marriage is stopped¹ although both the lover and his fiancée, the princess, are eager for it. Again in the Gambler's hymn the greatest dread to the gambler is his mother-in-law².

¹ RV., V. 61; 52-61; 81-82; VIII. 85-88; IX. 92.

² द्वेष्टि स्वश्रूरूपं जायां दण्डिं न नाथितो विन्दते मङ्गितरम् । ibid., X. 84, 8.

From both these cases it will also be evident that over the marriage of her daughter the mother had greater control than the father or the brother.

Although the parents had a guiding hand in the marriage, the chief rôle in it was played by the maiden herself. In the *Atharva Veda*¹ we read of the parents entertaining suitors in their home but ultimately asking them to court the woman they love and to win her. She it is who chooses her husband from a host of suitors or other assembled men.² The parents are more intermediaries.³

There were certain qualifications or disqualifications in a maiden that hastened or delayed her marriage. Accomplishment in arts and physical charms must have easily won husbands for girls in the free R̥gvedic society. The R̥gveda clearly shows that "many a maid was pleasing to the suitor who fain would marry her for her splendid riches." Thus the wealth of the bride made it easier for her to win a husband than for one who was without it, and riches along with beauty made it easier still.⁴ Infectious diseases seem to have been a serious disqualification for marriage. Ghosā had long to remain unwedded in her father's house,⁵ and she is said to have been taken in as a wife only when she had been cured of her skin disease through the kindness of the Aśvins.⁶ Blindness, however, was no disqualification and a blind bride was naturally better looked after than a faultless one. The text sounds a very sympathetic note in this regard when it reads, "When a man's daughter has been over eyeless (anaksā) who, knowing, will be wroth with her for blindness? Which of the two will lose on her his anger—the man who leads

¹ AV., VI. 61, 1.

² अत्रा वधूर्भवति यत्पुपेशाः स्वयं सा मित्रं वनुते जने चित् । RV., X. 27, 12.

³ ibid., X. 78, 4 ; 85, 15, 28.

⁴ ibid., X. 27, 12.

⁵ ibid., I. 117, 7 ; II. 17, 7 ; X. 89, 3 ; 40, 5.

⁶ ibid., I. 117, 7.

her or he who woos her ?”¹ This situation when compared to its modern type will look remarkably humane. A blind bride to-day survives more by chance than care. What was true of women must have been to a great extent true of men as well. At least we have one instance in Śyāvāśva whose marriage had been stayed because of his poverty and lack of poetical genius.² Later as soon as he was able to procure wealth through his services to the princess Śaśiyasī and Purumīha, he married his lady-love.³

In Vimada’s case also consent had been withheld which stopped the marriage as a result of which the lovers eloped.⁴ But both these cases of Śyāvāśva and Vimada are those of the aristocracy. It is possible that the commoners were freer in this respect.

The marriageable age fell in the post-puberty period. It is significant that there is not a single reference to child marriage in the whole of the Rk Samhitā. The Marriageable Age maiden was more than conscious of the love she was making and the bride was perfectly aware of the rituals she was a witness to. As we shall see below her assent to several features of the marriage ceremony was obligatory. The marriage hymn⁵ of Sūryā contains several references which show that the bride at the time of her marriage was quite grown up and fit for consummation and procreation.⁶ In fact consummation was an essential part of protracted Vedic marriage ritual.⁷ The rituals themselves supposed the bride to be a grown up woman.⁸

¹ यस्यानक्षा दुहिता जातवास कस्तौ विद्वौ अग्नि मन्याते अन्धाम् ।

कतरो मेनिं प्रति तं मुचाते य ई वहते य ई वाबरेयात् ॥ RV., X. 27, 11.

² ibid., V. 61 ; 52-61 ; 81-82 ; VIII. 85-88 ; IX. 92.

³ ibid., I. 117, 8.

⁴ ibid., I. 112, 19 ; 116, 1 ; 117, 20 ; X. 89, 7 ; 65, 12.

⁵ ibid., X. 85.

⁶ ibid., 25 ; 41 ; 42, 43 ; 45 ; 46.

⁷ ibid., X. 85.

⁸ ibid., VII. 55, 8.

Then we find that words used to denote women, most of which refer to unmarried maidens, signify their mature, youthful age. Thus the word kanyā,¹ with its several other derivations kanā,² *kanīnakā*³ and kanyanā,⁴ means a woman, maiden and young. Yuvatī,⁵ developed enough and fit to unite with a lover⁶ (marya), is likewise a youthful maiden. The words Yoṣā,⁷ Yoṣan,⁸ *Yoṣanā*⁹ and *Yoṣit*¹⁰ imply the sense of a young woman ripe for marriage.¹¹ We have already given a number of references to freedom of love and marriage, to the attendance at festivals and sumanas and to meetings of lovers at trysts.¹² An allusion has also been made to fatherless and brotherless girls boldly stepping out in quest of a suitable husband. Such a state of things could be possible only when post-puberty marriages were a rule. Of an exception to the contrary we have not a solitary record.

There is another line of reasoning which will prove marriage to have been performed of mature girls alone and of no others. Mention is made of the rite of Viśvāvasu in the verses of the Rgveda.¹³ Gandharva Viśvāvasu has been explained in later Sanskrit literature as a rod placed on the bed by the side of the bride to act as a witness of the couple's abstinence from union. When, at last, the first four days following the marriage ceremony were over, the husband prepared himself for the

¹ RV., I. 128, 10; 161, 5; III. 28, 10.

² ibid., X. 61, 5.

³ ibid., IV. 82, 28; X. 40, 9.

⁴ ibid., VIII. 35, 5.

⁵ ibid., I. 118, 5; II. 35, 4; III. 54, 14; IV. 18, 8; V. 2, 1. 2; IX. 86, 16; X. 80, 5.

⁶ ibid., III. 81, 7; 88, 10; IV. 20, 5; IX. 96, 20.

⁷ ibid., I. 117, 20.

⁸ IV. 5, 5.

⁹ ibid., III. 52, 3; 55, 5; 62, 8; VII. 95, 8.

¹⁰ ibid., IX. 28, 4.

¹¹ ibid., I. 48, 5; 92, 11; III. 88, 10; 88, 8.

¹² ibid., X. 84, 5; cf. ibid., 40, 6.

¹³ ibid., X. 85, 21-22.

consummation of marriage. To Viśvāvasu he addressed the following lines placing his foot on the bed :

“Rise up from hence ; this maiden hath a husband. I applaud Viśvāvasu with hymns and homage. Seek in her father’s home another fair one (anyamiccha), and find the portion from of old assigned thee.¹

“Rise up from hence, Viśvāvasu ; with reverence we worship thee. Seek thou another willing maid and with her husband leave the bride.”²

These verses occurring in course of a marriage hymn evidently prove the consummation of marriage just after the conclusion of the marital ritual which could have been possible only when the bride was mature for it. Then we have to bear in mind that Viśvāvasu was the fourth deity to whom the bride was supposed to be ideally wedded before the actual marriage took place. Before him three guardian deities of maturity held sway over her body. These were Varuṇa, Soma, and Agni in order of precedence. Varuṇa, the king of the natural order, made her inviolable ; Soma infused her with the rasa, the natural flow of the sexual secretion ; and Agni animated her for the act of procreation. Varuṇa represents the stage anterior to the visible signs of maturity and he is expected to keep watch over the maiden until she shows signs of womanhood. Just at this stage her charge passes from Varuṇa to Soma. Soma signifies a liquid flow and thus implies the menstrual flow of the girl. It is now that a change comes over the girl and she is fast changing to womanhood. Yet an urge to cohabit with man does not quite start as menstruation begins. It takes a little time. This interval is the charge of Agni who gives warmth to the body. It hatches in the adolescent woman the madness of love and gives fullness to her limbs and lustre

¹ उदीर्ष्वतिः पतिवती ह्येषा विश्वावसुं नमसा गीभिरीळि ।

अन्यामिच्छ पितृषदं व्यक्तां स ते भागो जनुषा तस्य विद्धि ॥ RV., X. 85, 21.

² उदीर्ष्वती विश्वावसो नमसेळामहे त्वा ।

अन्यामिच्छ प्रफर्ष्य सञ्जायां पत्यासृज ॥ ibid., 22.

to her body, animates her and generates in her the wild urge to mate which, when resisted and stayed, results in an elopement of Kamadyu and Vimada.¹

Thus when Agni had made the bride strong enough to conceive, Viśvāvasu, the presiding deity of conjugal arts and accomplishments, yielded to the temporal god, the husband, who had to begin the solemn and sacred act of procreation which was so very essential for the propagation of his race and for appeasing the thirst and hunger of the manes. It was a time when multiplication of the race was a dire need and when the newly wedded husband hoped that his wife would soon become a mother of ten mighty children.² It was a time when 'lack of sons was considered a misfortune and adoption only a makeshift.' Viśvāvasu thus took charge of the maiden when all physical signs of maturity including puberty were distinctly developed in her. This makes it sufficiently clear that the bride at the time of her marriage was in a full-grown state fit to give birth to children and not a plaything. She was—if we are very punctilious about knowing her age in years—at least sixteen years old. Just after her marriage she drove with her husband and took command of her new household which teemed with life of both 'bipeds and quadrupeds.'³ It is inconceivable otherwise how she could become an empress, samrājñī, 'unto her father-in-law and mother-in-law and unto her sister-in-law and brother-in-law.'⁴

Grown up marriage was the order of the day. We read of old-age marriages⁵ and of unmarried women growing old⁶ in their fathers' house. Kaksivūn, a great sage of the R̥gveda, married Romaśā, the grand

¹ RV., I. 112, 19 ; 116, 1 ; 117, 20 ; X. 89, 7 ; 65, 12.

² ibid., X. 85, 44. 45.

³ द्विपदे वा चतुष्पदे ibid., 48. 44.

⁴ ibid., 46.

⁵ ibid., I. 51, 18 ; 117, 7 ; II. 17, 7 ; X. 89, 9 ; 40, 5.

⁶ ibid., I. 117, 7 ; II. 17, 7 ; X. 89, 8 ; 40, 5.

daughter of king Bhāvya.¹ In his old age he married another princess Ghoṣā, herself an old woman.² Such old-age marriages in certain cases resulted in the invalidity of the husband and the unproductivity of the wife. We read of childless weaklings³ being helped with children by the Aśvins. "Ye came unto the calling of the weakling's dame (vadhramatyā)," prays Kākṣivān, "and granted noble offspring to the happy wife."⁴ Ghoṣā, his wife, in like manner chants her prayer: "With liberal bounty to the weakling's consort, ye heroes, gave a son Hiranyahasta."⁵ But such cases were certainly few in the society as marriages were generally contracted when both the bride and the bridegroom were in a completely developed and youthful state. It is possible that in cases of polygamous husbands such circumstances took rise. Kākṣivān himself in his young age had already been married to the grand-daughter of king Bhāvya while Ghoṣā, his second wife, had to stay unmarried until old age because of her skin disease, which when cured, she was taken in as a wife.

In a society where free love and free choice of the husband was normal, the idea of parivettā, i.e. marrying in order of seniority in age, of the later literature⁶ could not have found favour with people. It is natural that when several youthful sisters visited the samanas or such other festivals with a view to matrimony and when the youngers were able to attract attention of young men and marry them, the elder ones should suffer the undeserved humility of staying unmarried at their fathers' house and there growing old. We have no conclusive evidence in the R̥gveda on the point but relying on the testimony of the

Marriage in order of Age

¹ RV., I. 51, 18.

² ibid., I. 117, 7 ; II. 17, 7 ; X. 89, 8 ; 40, 5.

³ ibid., X. 89, 7 ; I. 117, 24.

⁴ ibid., X. 89, 7.

⁵ हिरण्यहस्तमदिवना रराणा पुत्रं नरा वध्रिमत्या अदत्तम् । ibid., I. 117, 24.

⁶ Vāṣ. Dh. Sū., XX. 7ff. (cf. Vāja. Sam., XXX. 9); cf. also Taitt. Sam., III. 2, 4, 4 ; Kaṭ. Śr. Sū. II. 1, 22, Kauś. Sū., 8, 5 ; 187, 87.

later Samhitās, Brāhmaṇas and the Sūtra literature Prof. Sarkār thinks that "in spite of some amount of social feeling against breaking the order of seniority in matrimony, younger sisters were not wanting who were anxious to woo before their elder sisters, and found husbands brave enough to face denunciations or opprobrious epithets.—Vedic society thus appears to have taken it for granted that the woman had her likes and dislikes, her loves and joys, as much as the man. This personal freedom of action of the unmarried woman develops into a dignified wifehood after her marriage."¹ This state of society could not possibly stick to a particular marital code of law. In later times the custom of marrying in order of age developed because child marriage came in vogue and it fell wholly to the parents to seek out suitable husbands for their daughters. It was different in the society of the Ṛgveda.

There is no doubt about the fact that although the caste system in its present form had not been evolved, nevertheless its beginnings were already marked in the Ṛgveda. At least the Brāhmaṇa and the Rājanya classes had been formed and the common people were called the Viśa from which Intermarriage the Vaiśyas of later times derived their name.

The Brāhmaṇas had already developed into a conspicuous class specializing mainly in the priestly vocation. It is they who form the greater number of the Ṛgvedic seers. In the marriage of Sūryā occurring in the comparatively later portion—the tenth book—of the Ṛgveda they are given largesses by the bride.²

But although the Ṛgveda Samhitā warrants the commencement of the caste system, its evidence clearly points out that the habits and customs which later on grew as peculiar traits to the distinct classes had not yet acquired their rigidity. There was no ban put, for example, on interdining and intermarrying. Intermarriages, of courses, lingered in a weak form till quite late in the classical period. During the Rġvedic age the occurrence of such marriages was very frequent. We glean a few instances of intermarriage from the Rġveda where the exigency and the context permit the poet to dwell upon, or refer to such matrimonial connections. This form of marriage was so common that it never struck a dissentient note among the people. It is but natural that such intermarriages should frequently occur as a result of the freedom that the maidens and young men enjoyed in making love and maturing it into a happy wedlock.

¹ Soc. His. of India, pp. 108-9.

² पुरा देहि शामल्यं ब्रह्मस्यो वि भजा वसु । RV., X. 85, 29.

In the Rġveda there is absolutely no restriction about intermarriages among the Aryans. We have no conclusive evidence in this Samhitā whether there was any definite control over the forms of marriage which later on came to be called Anuloma, a man of higher caste marrying a woman of a lower one, and Pratiloma, a woman of higher class taking for her husband a man from a lower one. In fact the case for such a distinction was definitely lacking. And we have evidence showing the existence of both in the society although the latter form may not have been frequently obtaining. But the growing importance of the Brāhmaṇas as an exclusive class was sure to usher in the Anuloma form of marriage. Of this we have several instances in the Rġveda itself. The marriages of Cyavāna,¹ Śyāvāśva,² Kakṣivān³ and Vimada⁴ refer to the Anuloma form of intermarriage. All these Brāhmaṇa ṛṣis and sons of ṛṣis married in the Rājanya families. Of these the last three deserve to be treated in a little detail.

The most interesting episode is that of Śyāvāśva. Śyāvāśva was the son of a prominent priest attached to the court of king Rathavīti, son of Darbha. There were occasions on festivals

¹ Cyavāna's name occurs in several verses : RV., I. 116, 10 ; 117, 18 ; 118, 6 ; V. 74, 5 ; VII. 68, 6 ; 71, 5 ; X. 89, 4.

² ibid., V. 61 ; 52-61 ; 81-82 ; VIII. 85-88 ; IX. 82. cf. Bṛhad., V. 49ff.

³ ibid., I. 126, 8 ; 51, 18.

⁴ ibid., I. 112, 19 ; 116, 1 ; 117, 20 ; X. 89, 7 ; 65, 12.

and sacrifices when Śyāvāśva and the daughter of Rathavīti saw and met each other. They were attracted to each other and free love developed between them. Śyāvāśva had a tender heart and therefore suffered subjectively more than his fiancée. Then in order to make the princess his wife he approached the king and begged of him her hand in marriage. The father was quite willing but the mother felt more concerned about her daughter for she had strong misgivings as to the accomplishments of the young man. Besides, the queen knew that Śyāvāśva was too poor to provide her daughter with her lordly requirements. Then again, her ideal of a son-in-law had been a rich young man endowed with the genius of a poet. The queen therefore naturally thinking the wooer of her daughter to be falling too short of her expectations refused to give her permission to the marriage and the negotiations fell through.

The striking beauty and grace of the princess had struck too deep a root in the heart of Śyāvāśva to make him forget her and to let the affair alone. Love caused him to suffer greatly. He gained one thing from his pleasant pain. He began to muse. His heart was tender and his mood reflective. His silent ponderings over his love and beauty of the princess gave him the eloquent ideas with which his tender heart and susceptible mind helped to turn out touching and sweet images of poetry. He soon developed into a master poet. He sang eloquently and the sad story of his rejected love which his composition embodied filled the air and echoed through the valleys. His fame as a poet spread far and wide.

There was a like sufferer in love. It was the princess Śaśiyasī. Her position had naturally gained her a throng of admirers. She had rejected all of them. But later her choice fell on a handsome Rājanya prince. The son of king Puru-miḥha, she thought, could eligibly aspire for her hand, and she selected him. But it seems there arose some difficulty in the realization of her objective : perhaps the prince did not know that she loved him ; perhaps he would not consent to the wedding. The princess began to suffer from the pangs of love and while yet suffering she heard of the painful story of Śyāvāśva. The fame of the latter as a poet and the nature of his malady won the sympathy of Śaśīyasī, who considered him withal an apt spokesman of hearts agonized by love. She sent for him while he was yet suffering from the refusal of the queen. The princess opened to the poet the secret of her heart and entrusted him with the mission of carrying her love-message to the son of Purumīḥa. No other person was better fitted for the mission than Śyāvāśva. He was smitten by the same ailment from which Śaśīyasī suffered and he could well imagine the sorry state of her feelings. He agreed to go on the errand and proceeded to win for Śaśīyasī the man after her heart. He was a poet and in love. He brought his negotiations to a successful close which resulted in the marriage of Śaśīyasī and the son of Purumīḥa. The newly married couple were "lavish in their benefactions towards the ambassador"¹ and they gave him 'droves of cows and horses'² and hundreds of chariots.³

Śyāvāśva had already become a poet and his gain of wealth through Śaśīyasī had completed his need regarding the conditions which the queen had put for her daughter's hand. The grateful poet "extolled in magnificent language the princess' liberality and the support that her husband would find in her firmness of character."

"Śaśīyasī has given me droves of cows and horses," sang he "together with a hundred chariots. For the husband recommended by Śyāvāśva, she has become a strong and powerful support."⁴

¹ Clarisse Bader : Women in Ancient India, p. 25.

² यो मे घेनूनां शतं वैदूदश्विर्यथाददत् । RV., V. 61, 10.

³ ibid.

⁴ सनत्साशब्धं पशुमुत्तमव्यं शतावयम् ।

एषावाश्वस्तुतायया दौर्वीरायोपबबूहत् ॥ ibid., 61, 5.

“Differing from other women, Śaśīyasī has proved herself more generous than a man who no longer honours the gods and who is greedy for gain.¹

“Amongst the Devas, she seeks him who may be fatigued, oppressed by thirst or want, and it is upon him she directs her thoughts.”²

This was indeed a sad reflection upon his poor, disappointed, rejected self. He was singing the glory of one who had succeeded in her love and in gaining the object of her desire, while he, the man who had brought about her happiness, was himself pining for the attainment of his objective ! The thought embodied in his song reacted, and the voice of the poet rang out in the hush of night and rent the air :

“O Night, carry my hymn to the son of Darbha. O Goddess, become the chariot of my prayer.³

“Speak of me to Rathavīti at the moment of pouring out the libation. Tell him that my love for his daughter is not extinguished.”⁴

These lines were the precursor of the later Meghadūta and of many other works that followed it. The first impassioned Yakṣa attuned these in the stillness of night and then he begged the Night itself to convey them to the separated beloved and her people. And they were heard. For, we read in later literature⁵ that Śyāvāśva married the princess whose hand he had sought for. The story of Śyāvāśva is a clear and conclusive proof of intermarriage between a Brāhmaṇa and a Kṣatriyā. It also incidentally serves as a case in point for the Amuloma marriage as in it a Brāhmaṇa youth marries a Rājanya maiden. There are at least ten hymns attributed to the

¹ उतत्वा स्त्री शशीयसी पुंसो भवति वस्यसी । अदेवनादराधसः ॥ RV., V. 61, 6.

² विद्या जानाति जसुरि वि तृष्यन्तं वि कामिनम् । देवना कुण्ठते मनः ॥ ibid., 7.

³ एतं मे स्तोममूर्ध्ने दाम्भ्याय परा बह । गिरो देवि रथीविह ॥ ibid., 17.

⁴ उत मे वोचतादिति सुतसोमे रथवीती । न कामो अप वेति मे ॥ ibid., 18.

⁵ Bṛhad., V. 41 ff.

authorship of Śyāvāśva while his name occurs many a time elsewhere. Naturally his story had become dear to the people and so it found mention at several places. We shall now pass on to the stories of Kākṣivān and Vimada.

Kākṣivān, a great sage of the time and one of the authors of the R̥gveda, was polygamous. He married first Romaśā, the grand-daughter of king Bhāvya¹, and then Ghoṣā, both Rājanya princesses. Kākṣivān was returning to his family after the completion of his studies.

Fatigued by his long journey he lay down to rest by the roadside under the luxuriant shade of the forest trees and fell fast asleep. Prince Svanaya, the son of king Bhāvya, came driving in his chariot in the meantime and saw the tired Brahmacārī sleeping on the ground. He woke him up and invited him to his chariot. The learning of Kākṣivān had already gained some fame and his talented talks soon won the admiration of the Rājanya prince. He had a charming daughter, Romaśā by name, whose marriage he proposed to the young graduate, who at once accepted the enviable offer. Kākṣivān, instead of returning directly to his parents, drove to the palace of king Bhāvya, who married his grand-daughter to him and offered him, besides, gold, slave girls, droves of cattle, chariots and horses. Followed by numerous escort and accompanied by his wife, Kākṣivān reached his father's house and there he related to his family the joys and triumphs of his journey, the munificence of prince Svanaya and the romantic circumstances in which he had married his bride. Then his wife, the young princess Romaśā, timidly advanced in her turn to her father-in-law and identifying herself with the family addressed him with much familiarity :

"He has accepted me as his wife and I cling to him like the rider to the whip which he grips in his hand. My husband grants me the enjoyment of a thousand precious gifts."²

¹ RV., I. 126.

² ibid., 8-6.

“Suffer me to approach you. Have pity on my weakness. I shall be always Romaśā, that is to say, the ewe of the Gandhāras.”¹

Later on Kākṣivān married another wife. She again was a Rājanya princess (rājñaduhitā)² who naturally had for her ideal of a husband ‘a car-borne chieftain rich in steeds.’³ But unfortunately her desire remained unrealized as she fell a victim to a skin disease, perhaps leprosy, which, in those days of direct choice of a husband, proved an unsurmountable impediment to her marriage. So in the house of her father she lay growing old and praying to the Aśvins to cure her of her disease and to find her a husband. The heavenly physicians took pity on her condition—‘maiden yet stricken in years’—cured her of her leprosy and found her a husband. Kākṣivān married her in his old age⁴, and thus the like wedded the like.

Vimada, again a Ṛṣi, married Śughnyu, otherwise called Kamadyu, who was a Rājanya princess, daughter of king Purumilha and perhaps the sister-in-law of Śaśiyasī for whom Śyāvāśva had striven and found a husband in the son of the king named above. Vimada and Kamadyu

Vimada loved each other and the former with a view to making the latter his legally wedded wife asked the permission of her father, the king, to their marriage. But the king seems to have had an imperious temper and his aristocratic consciousness revolted against the idea of a moneyless man marrying his daughter. He therefore refused to give his consent. The couple, however, had gone too long a way in their love to retrace their steps. They were very unlike Śyāvāśva and his fiancée and refused to suffer in silence like them. They resolved to become husband and wife, and taking

¹ उपोप मे परा मृशमा मे दमाणि मन्यथाः ।

सर्वाहमस्मि रोमशा गन्धारीणामिवाविका ॥ R.V., I. 126, 7.

² ibid., X. 40, 5.

³ मृतं मे अह्ने उत भूतमक्तवेऽववावते रथिने शक्तमवर्ते । ibid.

⁴ ibid., X. 40.

a daring step, eloped together to an unknown destination. The parents considering it foolish to stand in their way eventually agreed to their marriage and even commended their conduct. References to the incident are made in several passages of the Ṛgveda.¹

In later works the Anuloma form has found a frequent mention and Prof. Sarkar instances several cases to show that this form of marriage was quite common. "The Atharva-veda," he observes, "glorifies the brāhmaṇa as the best husband for women of all other 'varṇas,'² though from the same context it transpires that the 'brāhmaṇi' often held opposite views, and had to be reclaimed from persons of other 'varṇas' with the help of the king's justice. 'Vaiśi-putra's are known to the early Brāhmaṇas,'³ in the Yv. Ārya-Śūdrā connexions are subjects of jest amongst court and priestly circles,⁴ so that legal marriage between such must have been frequent..."⁵

In like manner the Pratiloma form of marriage had also found sanction in the Ṛgvedic society to which several allusions are made in the Samhitā. Śaśvatī,⁶ the daughter of the sage Aṅgiras was married to king Asaṅga. King Svanaya Bhāvayavya, the son of Bhāvya and the brother of Romaśā the wife of sage Kākṣivān, was wedded to a Brāhmaṇī wife descended from the family of Aṅgiras.⁷ The name of Yayāti⁸ may also be added to the list. He married Devayānī, the daughter of the sage Śukrācārya. The story of his marriage with the daughter of the Ṛṣi is narrated in the Purāṇas while the names of both the son-in-law and the father-in-law occur in the Ṛgveda itself.

¹ ṚV., I, 112, 19 ; 116, 1 ; 117, 20 ; X, 89, 7 ; 65, 12.

² AV., V. 17, 8, 9.

³ Taitt., Brā., III. 9, 7, 8 ; Śat., Brā., XIII. 2.

⁴ Vāja. Sam., XXIII. 80-81 ; Taitt. Sam., VII. 4, 19, 2-8.

⁵ Some Asps. of the Soc. Hts. of Ind., p. 102.

⁶ ṚV., VIII. 1, 84.

⁷ ibid., I. 126

⁸ ibid., X, 68, 1.

Thus it can be asserted with ample force that intermarriage among the varṇas was not considered bad and was a common feature of the day. And it may be shown with sufficient clearness that it obtained not only between the Aryan varṇas but also between the Aryans and the conquered natives, Dāsas, the slaves. The condition of the society consequent upon conquest made it almost a custom for a man to bring along with his wife 'marriageable' slave girls.¹ We read frequently of ṛṣis being presented with female slaves² by princes who must have at occasions furnished their Aryan masters with wives from amongst them. Female slaves have been even called vadhūs,³ legally marriageable brides. Many important Ṛgvedic Aryans were sons of slave mothers.⁴ Kakṣivan, the celebrated seer and the son-in-law of two princes, Svanaya Bhāvayavya and the father of Ghoṣā, was himself born of a female slave.⁵ So also were Auśija, Kavaṣa or Vatsa sons of slave mothers⁶ (dāśī or Śūdrā). It is very natural that in most cases where chances of a legal wedding were remote the slave girls might have served well as concubines. Prof. Sarkar remarks very judiciously: "The use of the term 'dāśī,' as compared with that of 'dāsa,' in Vedic texts, shows that the 'dāśī' very early came into contact with Aryan masters, as a result probably of the extermination and subjugation of aboriginal tribesmen; accordingly, 'dāśī-putra's became quite common, and slave-girls presented to priests by conquerors could be called 'vadhu's or 'wedable' women."⁷

Intermarriage is the outcome of both a circumstantial need and a choice. Conditions for both were present in the Ṛgvedic society. Free love and free choice of a partner in life

¹ RV., VIII. 19, 36; 68, 17; VI. 27, 8.

² ibid.

³ ibid., VI. 27, 8; VIII. 19, 36; 68, 17.

⁴ ibid., I. 18, 1; 112, 1.

⁵ ibid.

⁶ ibid.

⁷ Some Asps. of the Soc. His. of Ind., p. 102.

as well as free mixing of the sexes are bound to result in inter-marriages. Love is seldom the result of calculation and it always acts with the swiftness of an avalanche on young people. The existence of young slave girls, besides the wife, in the Aryan home was sure to attract the notice of the Aryan master and it is no wonder that the latter occasionally lapsed into the laxities of the age. The *Yajur Veda*¹ alludes even to Śūdra-Ārya connections and the *Atharva Veda*² contains a charm directed against the wife's paramour, who is a slave 'winning her love by sheer physical strength.' The *Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra*³ refers to the ancient tradition that 'the family slave (dāsa) could lawfully marry the widow of his master.' Thus we see that in spite of his best endeavours the Rġvedic Aryan was not always able to keep his blood pure. It was the need of the time, the pressure of circumstances, which outwitted him and over which he had no control.

The society had come to acquire varied needs. Marriage among the Hindus to-day has become stereotyped, formalized and fixed in all details. It has come to have a single form and naturally therefore all the different types of it mentioned and detailed in the Smṛtis have become superficial and obsolete. Surely the society of the Rġveda and that of slightly later times had served as the earlier and later models for the Smṛtis. The eight forms of marriage of which we read in them were certainly current at some time or other in the Aryan society and they may have been features of the institution of marriage in the Rġveda itself, although we do not find all of them referred to in the Samhitā. The omission of an allusion to all of them may have been due to the restricted subject matter of the work. The Rġveda is, in the first instance, a work of rituals and of philosophy in embryo and references to mundane affairs can not but be scarce, only few and far between. Nevertheless, most of the later forms have found a mention either directly or indirectly. They are the following, viz. (1) Āsura-Brāhma,

¹ Vāj. Sam., XXIII, 30-31; Tait. Sam., VII, 4, 19, 2-3.

² Some Asps. of the Soc. His. of Ind., p. 102.

³ IV, 2, 18.

 (2) Prājāpatya, (8) Svayamvara, (4) Gāndharva,
 (5) Rākṣasa and (6) Contractual. The terms
 Kinds of Marriage quoted above are not of the Rgveda but of the Manusmṛiti and other Smṛtis. The Samhitā does not specifically refer to them by name and it is doubtful if the actual names of these technical categories had been evolved by the time when these hymns were composed. But the circumstances and the nature of the matrimonial connections referred to in the Samhitā are such as may easily and conveniently be classed under one or the other of the forms enumerated above.

Thus, to begin with, we have two references to the bride-money being payed by the bridegroom and accepted by the bride's father.¹ It seems that when a suitor was desertless (viṣāmātuh) and bereft of accomplishments he was obliged to win the consent of his future father-in-law by pleasing him with liberal gifts. The text of the Rgveda clearly reads: "For I have heard that ye gave wealth more freely than worthless son-in-law or spouse's brother."² It is yet very doubtful if this can be definitely termed as purchase money. It will be seen later on that dowry was generally given by Āsura-Brāhma the father and the brother to the bridegroom along with the bride, though no sweeping assertion can be made against the possibility of the existence of the custom of purchase of bride. The usual gift seems to have been a pair of oxen, the great necessary of agricultural life of the early Aryan. The case in point may not be altogether isolated and singular, and such marriages may have been more frequent than actually evidenced inasmuch as there the status enjoyed by the woman was one of privilege and it is possible that a worthless man—in those days of marriage by the free choice of the maiden and in the absence of a compelling control on her will—may have found it easier to influence

¹ अश्वं हि भूरिदावत्तरा वां विजामातुस्त वा वा स्यात् । RV., I. 109, 2. also ibid., VIII. 2, 20.

² ibid., I. 109, 2

the nearest relations of the bride by handsome presents than to venture on the doubtful result of open wooing.

And if we bring history to our aid we shall find that India has been seldom free from the existence of such an evil as this side by side with the ideal sacrifice implied in the Prājāpatya form of wedding. Kālidāsa mentions the possibility of such an incident as the existence of marriage through payment (duhitṛ śulka samsthayā).¹ We find that the custom to a considerable extent endures till now and many cases of the type are being registered everyday by institutions working in the society to erradicate the unwanted evil. Very commonly is being disclosed the working of secret gangs employed in stealing or purchasing and selling away brides in Bengal, Bihar, the United Provinces and the Punjab. Therefore the existence of such a custom would not have been altogether impossible, although, it may be asserted that it militates against the ideal of free love which was a strong condition of marriage—of which we shall have occasion to treat below—particularly when the father left almost a free hand to his daughter in matters of the choice of her husband. The evidence on the point is rather meagre and inconclusive and the one we have in view itself contains a reference to dowry paid by the brother of the bride to the groom. This form of marriage, however, would be covered under the term Āsura-Brāhma. In the Āsura form of marriage payment of some consideration to the relatives and father of the bride with a view to marrying the bride is imperative. This form of marriage differs from the Brāhma form inasmuch as consideration plays an essential part in it while in the Brāhma it does not.

The Prājāpatya form of marriage seems to have been most normally obtaining in the society. In this form the father of the bride adorned his daughter with ornaments Prājāpatya and gave her away to the bridegroom after the completion of the necessary ceremonies. These . rites mark the beginnings, in howsoever crude a form, of those that were perfectly systematized in the Smṛtis, Sūtras and Vivāhapaddhatis (manuals of marriage rituals). The Prājāpatya was considered, as now, the ideal form of marriage and the Ṛgvedic seer could not conceive of a better and more sacred form with which to bind the typical Aryan wife Sūryā with her lord Soma.¹ It is almost the only form of marriage now permitted by law and prevailing in the Hindu community. Its incidents are the same as those that featured in the wedding of the first known pair in literature. The marriage of Sūryā may have been an outcome of an earlier Svayamvara to which we find allusions in the very hymn which consecrates it but the fact remains that the legal sanction resulted only after the performance of the nuptial ceremony incidental to the Prājāpatya form. The incidents we shall describe later in certain detail. Here is a system in the history of human marriage which purports to make the nuptial union permanent and its ceremonies the sacramental basis of such union. The system must have taken a considerably long time to evolve. It has none of the patriarchal traits of marriages elsewhere. It has its base in the sacrifice of the parents and in no consideration of value. This leads us naturally to the system of dowry.

¹ Raghu., xi. 88.

Dowry in whatever form is its necessary incident and essential feature. Unfortunately the system to-day has taken an oppressive turn inasmuch as it puts a price on the head of a prospective bridegroom, but so long as it forms part of the great gift—dāna—it is undoubtedly a glowing emolument of the Prājāpatya form of marriage. Later authors of the manuals of Hindu marriage and of other cultural documents and literature call the giving away of the daughter a great gift, kanyādāna. It is inconceivable how far the marriage can be called a kanyādāna in which the bride would form an article of sale. The Prājāpatya form of marriage, which makes the gift of daughter almost conditional on providing her person with such ornaments and robes as the father or the brother easily can, was indeed a high ideal attained by the R̥gvedic Aryan. Later the system degenerated which to-day means so much oppression to the parents of an adolescent daughter. Still the ideal is so dear that they bravely suffer it. Even now it is seldom that the Hindu parents or other elderly kinsmen of the bride eat at her expense and enjoy anything which would be of any material value to her ; and cases there have been when punctilious parents have refused even to look at the house of their daughter for fear of enjoying that which is their daughter's property. The bride's parents or those in loco parentis still do not accept any invitation to meals at the bride's house. This may be an absurd extreme but it does, for the matter of that, point to a determined attitude to spare and protect the ideal.

¹ ṚV., X. 85.

In the R̥gvedic society, not only the young girl was not sold to her betrothed, but she was, as mentioned above, even dowered by her father and brother. We know it for certain that the system of dowry was an exceptionally rare event in antiquity. The purchase of bride was the normal custom in other cultures and therefore the existence of the system of dowry among the Aryans eloquently proves that they realized the moral value of their women and the dignity of marriage. They did not consider their women as chattels for sale but as possessors of souls who could give themselves away. We learn from the incident of Kākṣivān's marriage that the bridegroom received besides his wife, gold, numerous flocks of cattle, chariots and horses.¹ The brother of the bride has been especially mentioned as giving away riches as dowry to his brother-in-law.² The prospects of a rich dowry or the wealth that the bride would or did receive from her ancestral property made it naturally so easy to find a good husband.³ The verse says : "How many a maid is pleasing to the suitor who fain would marry for her splendid riches ? If the girl be both good and fair of feature, she finds, herself, a friend among the people.”¹ Again we read of ‘treasury’ (koṣa) being sent along with the bride to the home of her husband : “Thought was the pillow of her couch, sight was the unguent for her eyes : Her treasury was earth and heaven when Sūryā went unto her lord.”² This verse would also suggest that besides other valuable treasures, the dowry of the bride consisted of articles of toilet (caḥṣurā abhyañjanam)³ and other everyday necessities like a couch and bed pillow (upabarhaṇam).⁴ It may be noted that these articles even now form part of the bride’s dowry. The preceding verse⁵ refers to anudeyā, the giver, possibly the father or the brother. The slave girls, who very often were given away along with the bride to the groom, may have, in the first instance, accompanied her as her personal maid-servants and thus formed part of her dowry. These items of the bride’s possession which figured as the dowry undoubtedly formed her personal property, her strīdhana of later legal literature.

¹ R̥V., I. 126, 1-8.

² ibid., I. 109, 2 ; also cf. VI. 28, 5 ; X. 27, 12 ; 85, 6.

³ ibid., X. 27, 12.

Whatever the form of marriage through which the couple desired to unite, one thing was obligatory, except perhaps in the Gāndharva form : it was the performance of the nuptial sacraments of the Prājāpatya form at the time of marriage. This, however, would not have been binding in cases of Gāndharva marriage in which secrecy must have been of the essence and in which even elopement was an incident at times. We shall deal with the rituals and other features of the Prājāpatya form when treating of marriage proper.

¹ कियती योषा मयतो बधूयोः परिप्रीता पत्यसा वार्षेण ।

भद्रा बधूर्भवति यत्सुपेसाः स्वयं सा मित्रं वनुते जने चित् ॥ RV., X. 27, 12.

² चित्तिरा उपबर्हणं चक्षुरा अभ्यञ्जनम् ।

द्यौर्भूमिः कोश आसीद्यद्यात्सूर्या पतिम् ॥ ibid., 85, 7.

³ ibid.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ ibid., 6.

The epic system of Svayamvara seems to have germinated in the R̥gvedic period. Svayamvara is the self-choice of a husband by the bride out of her many suitors. When too many gods aspired for the hand of fair Sūryā, Savitā, her father, arranged for a Svayamvara fixing a goal which Svayamvara the winner of the bride must reach first of all.

The assembled divine suitors assented to the stipulation and in the race that followed the Aśvins were victorious thus winning the bride in full glory.¹ In another verse also the same sort of choice is evidenced, as for example :

“Then she who came for friendship (i.e. seeking for a husband), maid of noble birth, elected you as husbands, you as her lords.”²

Gāndharva marriage has not been specifically mentioned but its existence may be easily imagined from the free life in the society and from the free love-making. We read in the R̥gveda of young unmarried women meeting their lovers at trysts³ and inviting them in their own chambers at the dead of night.⁴ Its comparatively clear evidence may be found in the love of Vimada, a Brahmin R̥ṣi, and Kamadyu,⁵ a Rājanya princess, which, since it led to an elopement, must have resulted in a Gāndharva wedlock. This form of marriage was entirely an affair of love which consummated in a union without the proposal of marriage. It proceeded entirely from free love and mutual inclination of a youth and a maiden, and was concluded with the mutual consent and agreement of the couple without consulting their relatives.

¹ यदश्विना पृच्छमानावयार्तं त्रिचक्रेण बहूतुं सूर्यायाः ।

विश्वे देवा अनु तद्वामजानन्पुत्रः पितराववृणीत पूषा ॥ R̥V., X. 85, 14.

आ वां रथं दुहिता सूर्यस्य कार्ष्णोवातिष्ठदर्वता जयन्ती ।

विश्वे देवा अन्वमन्यन्त हृद्भिः समुश्रिषा नासत्या सचेये ॥ ibid., I. 116, 17.

² आ वां पतित्वं सख्याय जग्मुषी योषावृणीत जेन्या युवां पती ॥ ibid., 119, 5.

³ X. 84, 5.

⁴ ibid., I. 184, 8.

⁵ ibid., I. 112, 19 ; 116, 1 ; 117, 20 ; X. 89, 7 ; 65, 12.

It was later ratified as a fait accompli under the Hindu law of Factum Valet by the parents of the contracting parties as was actually done by Purumiḥa, the father of Kamadyu, the eloping bride. The most interesting case of a Gāndharva wedlock in Indian history has been furnished by the Mahābhārata in the story of Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā which later became the theme of Kālidāsa's immortal play, the Abhijñāna Śākuntala.

The incident of elopement, mentioned above, would indirectly refer to another form of marriage—that of Rākṣasa of the later-day classification—in which the carrying away of the bride by force was considered essential. It was not necessary that the woman, thus carried, should be inimical to such a project. In later literature Subhadṛā, Rākṣasa Rukmiṇī, or Vāsavadattā proved a great help to the flight and aided the abducting hero—Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa or Udayana—in the daring exploit. The elopement of Vimada and Kamadyu thus equally furnishes us with an instance of the Rākṣasa form of marriage as with the Gāndharva one.

In a hymn¹ of the R̥gveda we come across a sort of marriage absolutely unknown to the later writers and uncovered by their classification. It is a companionate sort of contractual marriage. In the hymn addressed to Urvaśī by Purūravā we find a sort of agreement for the breach of which the king had to rue afterwards when Urvaśī deserted him and flew up in the sky. She had consented to live with the king on the condition that the latter must look after her ewes and must not appear naked before her. Urvaśī originally belonged to the Gandharvas to whom she had to return if an occasion permitted her. The Gandharvas, sad and unhappy due to their separation from her, thought out a project and launched upon it. On a dark night they disturbed Purūravā in his sleep and while pretending to steal away the ewes they bleated like lambs.² The king left his bed in a desperate hurry and pursued them little minding that he had been in bed and undressed. The wily Gandharvas at once contrived to cause a flash of lightning and thus revealed to Urvaśī the naked form of Purūravā. Urvaśī was rendered instantaneously free from the contract.

¹ RV., X, 95.

² ibid., 95, 8.

Referring to the stipulations of the agreement she addressed the bewailing king thus : "I knew, and warned thee, on that day. Thou wouldst not hear me. What sayest thou, when naught avails thee?"¹ This temporary union was evidently based on one-sided love. Urvaśī, like the wind² 'difficult to capture', did not respond to his mad love but being compelled by the condition of the contract she 'coldly received his fond caresses.'³ She 'yielded to his desires and made him the master of her external body.'⁴ The case of Urvaśī is that of a courtesan. She acts in the manner of a common prostitute selling her body to any man. Naturally such a woman cannot give her soul away to the man who woos her. She is not a common Aryan woman but a temporary mistress. The agreement clearly looks like one with a mistress, who on a certain consideration agrees to live with an influential king, reverting in the end to her old profession. In clear words she says : "Go home again, thou fool, thou hast not won me."⁵ And then she explains the woman that she is, a veritable courtesan : "With women there can be no lasting friendship : hearts of hyenas are the hearts of women."⁶ In vain does Purūravā threaten and wail : "Thy lover shall flee forth this day for ever, to seek, without return, the farthest distance. Then let his bed be in Destruction's bosom, and there let fierce rapacious wolves devour him."⁷

¹ अशांसं त्वा विदुषी सस्मिन्नहम् आशूणोः किममुवदासि ॥ R̥V., X. 95, 11.

² दुरापना वात इवाहमस्मि ॥ ibid., 2.

³ त्रिः स्म माहूः इत्ययो वैतसेनोत स्म मेऽव्यत्यै पूणासि ॥ ibid., 5.

⁴ पुरुरवोऽनु ते केतमायं राजा मे वीर तन्वस्तदासीः ॥ ibid.

⁵ प्र तत्ते हिनवा यत्ते अस्मे परेह्यस्तं नहि मूर मापः ॥ ibid., 18.

⁶ न वै स्त्रैणानि सख्यानि सन्ति सालावृक्षाणां हृदयान्येता ॥ ibid., 15.

⁷ सुदेवो अद्य प्रपतेदनावृत्परावतं परमां गन्तवा उ ।

अथा शयीत निहृतेरुपस्थेऽर्धनं वृका रभसासो अद्यः ॥ ibid., 14.

Urvaśī listens to nothing: nothing moves her to pity or passion. Such marriage cannot obviously be an outcome of sacraments. This same story has been immortalized by Kālidāsa in his famous play Vikramorvaśī. There too no sacraments are performed for the temporary union. The nymph comes, lives her hour of joy, and disappears.

A loose kind of association existed at times between the Aryan master and his female slaves. At the time of marriage these slave girls were in certain cases given away along with the bride for sexual needs. They are called vadhū,¹ marriageable women. Although by conferring on these women the title of vadhū, legal sanction has been given to a union with these, yet it may be supposed that such connections would have proved no better than virtual concubinage, and undoubtedly where such connections resulted from a casual laxity of the master, the favoured slave would not have fared better than a concubine in comparison with his legally wedded wife. It is, however, of singular value to note that whatever the R̥gvedic Aryan touched he turned into gold, and it may give us a certain degree of satisfaction to learn that whenever he cared to touch his slave he raised her to the status of a wife in many cases enjoying the privileges of the legal wife. The son born of such love would be considered legitimate. Kākṣīvān, as we have already noted above, was the son of a slave mother and so also were some other important Vedic personages like Auśija, Kavaṣa or Vatsa. No body can doubt the perfect legitimacy of Kākṣīvān, for not only was he one of the important authors of the R̥gveda but was also favoured with two excellent marriages both making him a son-in-law of ruling princes. Then, again, Ayus, the son of Purūravā Aila, to whom the R̥gveda refers as already conceived by Urvaśī,² is consecrated as the heir apparent of his father in the Vikramorvaśī of Kālidāsa.

¹ RV., VIII. 19, 36; cf. V. 47, 6.

² ibid., X. 95, 12-13.

³ Act V.

Perhaps another way of getting a wife in marriage was through service. Śyāvāśva and Vimada, whose names and stories we read in the R̥gveda itself, are described in later literature to have received from their respective fathers-in-law their brides through their services to them.

We shall now pass on to marriage proper.

It has already been stated above that on festal gatherings and such other occasions there were opportunities when unmarried young men and maidens formed acquaintance. If such an acquaintance proved lasting and love developed, permission for marriage was sought from the parents, especially from the father and in his absence from the brother. The negotiation was effected through the best friend of the suitor who was termed vara and who escorted the bride home. The best friend of Soma and the varas of Sūryā were the Aśvins. When the consent of the father had been received, the marriage took place in which the bride was given away with her dowry. The marriage was performed in the traditional manner Marriage proper in the presence of both the parties and their friends in the house of the bride's parents as in the case of Sūryā which we shall describe below. The R̥gveda gives us enough material, which, when pieced together, would make up the incidents that preceded and accompanied the tying of the nuptial knot and the religious rites that consecrated it. An account of the details of marriage is found in hymn 85 of the tenth book of the R̥gveda which may be analysed now.

This wedding hymn, it may be said at the very outset, is a disjointed piece of verses loosely strung together. It has very little unity. Sūryā's bridal is the theme of this hymn. Sūryā is the typical Aryan bride and her instance may serve as a type to show the way in which the common Aryan marriages were performed. In the hymn there is a reference to a Svayamvara¹—a tournament in which the suitors were asked to drive their chariots to a fixed goal, the foremost driver to be rewarded with the hand of the bride. Svayamvara of course was not the common type of marriage as we read of other forms, already enumerated above, which were the result of free love. It may have been a feature in the wedding of royalties. In the Svayamvara alluded to the Ásvins drove their chariot foremost¹ thus proving their eligibility to marry Sūryā. In this hymn there is a clear indication of the fact that Soma was the wooer and therefore Ásvins were only the bestmen of the bridegroom; but nevertheless, from other references² it would appear that they themselves were the husbands that Sūryā chose for her. The reason of this apparent contradiction is that the various verses which contain this conflicting evidence are composed by different poets at different periods of time. This union is a piece of Nature-myth. Sūryā is the light generated by the sun and so she has been called the daughter of Savitā. This light is borrowed by the moon, Soma—to whom specific reference is made in the opening verses of the hymn³—with which she shines and which she reflects to the Earth. The light itself is carried to the moon through the medium of the morning and evening twilight, that the twin Ásvins are. This is why there is a reference made to the Ásvins on whose car the bride Sūryā is said⁴ to be borne to Soma, her husband. This is why again she has been mentioned as choosing the Ásvins also as her husbands. But we are not concerned here with the inner sense and metaphysical interpretation of the hymn or its several incidents. We shall deal here only with the human element which features in the verses and in the personified phenomena which are embodied therein. It is because of this reason that a study of the similes and such other seemingly superfluous points becomes

¹ RV., X. 85, 14.

¹ RV., I. 116, 17.

² आ वां पतित्वं सख्याय जग्मुषी योषावृणीत जेन्या युवां पती । ibid., 119, 5.
 of. I. 118, 5.

³ ibid., X. 85, 1-5 ; ibid., 9.

⁴ पूषा त्वेतो नयतु हस्तगृह्यादिवना त्वा प्र वहतां रथेन । ibid., 26.

most essential for our subject. Griffith observes : "The main object of this composite hymn, which is one of the latest in the Rigveda, is the ceremony of marriage in general and more especially the wedding of Sūryā, the daughter of the Sun, who is regarded as the typical bride. The various deities and deified objects, of which Soma, Sūryā, and Marriage are the chief, are enumerated in the index of hymns. The Rishi or seer is Sūryā,"¹

'In Aghā days,' i.e. in the month of Māgha, February, when the moon is in the lunar mansion maghā, the festivities prior to marriage commenced. This was the beginning of the Spring. An important feature of these festivities was the slaying of oxen for the purposes of feasts. Feasts even now precede the actual marriage. The festivities perhaps marked the commencement of the decorations, the anointing of the body with termeric, etc. In the next month of Arjunī, i.e. Phālguna, actual wedding took place. The verse in point is very conclusive. It reads :

"The bridal pomp of Sūryā, which Savitar started, moved along.

In Maghā days are oxen slain, in Arjunis they wed the bride."²

This verse with which the hymn should have opened had its author cared for logical unity, however, comes slightly late, and the opening verses, 1 to 5, are utilized in an attempt to identify the celestial Soma with the moon. These are followed up by others, '6 to 17, which relate to the wedding of Soma with the sun maiden Sūryā. The Āsvins here appear in the capacity of groomsmen and they ask for the hand of Sūryā from her father on behalf of Soma, the moon.³ The bride had a 'dear bridal friend'⁴ and was led to her husband's home by another

¹ The Hymns of the Rigveda, p. 266, footnote.

² सूर्याया वहतुः प्रागात्सविता यमवासृजत् ।

अघासु हन्यन्ते गोवोऽर्जुन्योः पर्युह्यते ॥ RV., X. 85, 18.

³ अश्विना वरा ibid., X. 85, 8 ; अश्विनास्तामृभा वरा ibid., 9 ; also cf. ibid., 14.

⁴ रैम्यासीदनुदेयी ibid., 6.

such friend.¹ In the present case Raibhī and Nārāśamsī, the personified sacred song and praise, have been conceived as acting for such friends.² She took with her a bed (suggested by the pillow³), articles of toilet⁴ and riches⁵ comprising of several items of dowry. The Ásvins were her 'bridesmen'⁶ and 'Agni was the leader of the train'⁷ when the sun-god Savitar 'bestowed his willing Sūryā on her lord.'⁸ The chariot on which Sūryā was borne to her new home was 'a spirit-fashioned car,'⁹ well-shaped, coloured with a golden yellow hue¹⁰ and provided with two¹¹ strong clean¹² wheels¹³ and an axle.¹⁴ It was a canopied¹⁵ light-rolling¹⁶ chariot decked with a beautiful railing of cross-bars¹⁷ and yoked to two white bulls.¹⁸ It was made of the wood of Sālmali¹⁹ or the silk-cotton tree and was decorated with Kimsuka flowers.²⁰ The bride put on her diaphanous attire²¹ and then

¹ नाराशंसी न्योचनी RV., X. 85, 6.

² ibid.

³ उपबर्हणं ibid., 7.

⁴ अभ्यञ्जनम् ibid.

⁵ कोश ibid.

⁶ ibid., 8.

⁷ अग्निरासीत्पुरोगवः ibid.

⁸ सूर्या यत्पत्ये शंसन्तीं मनसा सविताददात् । ibid., 9.

⁹ मनस्सयं ibid., 12.

¹⁰ हिरण्यवर्णं ibid., 20.

¹¹ चक्रे ibid., 11. 12.

¹² शुची ते चक्रे ibid., 12.

¹³ सुचक्रम् ibid., 20.

¹⁴ अक्ष ibid., 12.

¹⁵ कुरीरं छन्द ओपशः ibid., 8 ; छदिः ibid., 10.

¹⁶ सुवृत्तं ibid., 20.

¹⁷ प्रतिषयः ibid., 8.

¹⁸ शूक्रावनद्वाहावास्तां ibid., 10 ; गावो ibid., 11.

¹⁹ शल्मलि ibid., 20.

²⁰ सुकिशुकं ibid.

²¹ भद्रमिद्रासो ibid., 6.

mounted¹ the sacred car. The drive to the new home was accompanied with hymns and chants.² Next there follows in course of two verses³ a description of the couple,—the sun represented by Sūryā and the moon—the prototype of human marriage, as an inseparable pair. "Moving in close succession by their magic power," sings the seer, "these children twain come dancing to the sacrifice. One of the pair beholdeth all existing things; the other ordereth seasons and is born again.⁴ He, born afresh, is new and new for ever: ensign of days he goes before the Mornings. Coming, he orders for the gods their portion. The Moon prolongs the days of our existence."⁵ "Stanzas 20-33," says Griffith, "contain a collection of formulæ repeated when the bride mounts her chariot, while she is travelling to her husband's house, when she arrives there, and on the following morning."⁶ But this arrangement of the verses would hardly be correct, for the verses 21 and 22 are clearly addresses to the Viśvāvasu Gandharva, the last guardian deity of the virgin, on bed at the time when the husband approaches the newly wedded wife with a view to consummate the marriage. But of this we shall treat in due course.

Thus while the priests were kindling the fire and praising Agni and juice was being squeezed out⁷ under the pressing mortar, the chief priest intoned the marriage hymn. The bridal Pomp started and moved along.⁸ Both the parties pressed forward within the enclosure. Then the marriage proper and the rites incidental thereto followed but of these we have no

¹ आरोहत्प्रयती पतिम् RV., X. 85, 12; आ रोह ibid., 20.

² ibid., 28. 32, etc.

³ ibid., 18-19.

⁴ पूर्वापरं चरतो माययती शिशू क्रीळन्ती परि यातो अश्वरम् ।
विश्वान्यन्यो भुवनाभिचष्ट ऋतूरन्यो विदधञ्जायते पुनः ॥ ibid., 18.

⁵ नवो नवो भवति जायमानोऽह्नां केतुष्वसामेत्यग्रम् ।
मार्गं देवेभ्यो विदधात्यायन्त्र चन्द्रमास्तिरते दीर्घमायुः ॥ ibid., 19.

⁶ The Hymns of the Rigveda, p. 270, footnote.

⁷ RV., X. 85, 8.

⁸ सूर्याया बहनुः प्रागात्तविता यमवासुजत । ibid., 18.

clear evidence. The marital ceremonies being over, the injunctions and the āśirvacana of the priest followed. He addressed the bride : "Now from the noose of Varuṇa I free thee, wherewith most blessed Savitar hath bound thee. In Law's seat, to the world of virtuous action, I give thee up uninjured with thy consort."¹ The noose of Varuṇa in the above verse refers to the waist-band with which the bride was girded after she had been bathed, combed and dressed for the marriage ceremony.² The verse is slightly subtle and embodies a somewhat hidden sense. The maiden before her marriage is naturally the ward of Varuṇa, who is the guard and ordainer of all laws of nature. His noose, which is the chastizer of all evil-doers, is here the belt of virgin chastity. From this restriction with which the father binds the daughter³ till her marriage the priest now frees⁴ the bride and gives her over 'in law's seat'⁵—under the established rules and ceremonies of marriage—to her husband in sexually uninjured state⁶ for further virtuous actions in the world.⁷ "Hence, and not thence," the priest enjoins her, "I send thee free. I make thee softly fettered there, that, boundless Indra, she may live blest in her fortune and her sons."⁸ Once the wife is permanently settled with her husband her freedom is tenderly restricted. From her father's house and from his care she is set free but she now takes charge of new responsibilities in her husband's home. In course of his nuptial benediction the officiating priest announces her new status as a wife in the following words : "Go to the house to

¹ प्र त्वा मुञ्चामि वरुणस्य पाशाद्येन त्वाबध्नात्सविता सुशेवः ।

ऋतस्य योनौ सुकृतस्य लोकेऽरिष्टां त्वा सह पत्या दधामि ॥ RV., X. 85, 24.

² Max Müller : Rigveda Samhitā, Vol. VI. Preface, p. 14.

³ cf. प्रेतो मुञ्चामि नामुतः RV., X. 85, 25.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ ऋतस्य योनौ ibid., 24.

⁶ ibid.

⁷ सुकृतस्य लोके ibid.

⁸ प्रेतो मुञ्चामि नामुतः सुबद्धाममुतस्करम् ।

यथेयमिन्द्र मीढः सुपुत्रा सुभगोसति ॥ ibid., 25.

be the household's mistress and speak as lady to thy gathered people.¹ Happy be thou and prosper with thy children here : be vigilant to rule thy household, in this homo. Closely unite thy body with this man, thy lord. So shall ye, full of years, address your company."² Soon after the idea of inauspiciousness haunting auspiciousness asserts to the mind of the priest and he refers to the possibility of the fast clinging female incubus in the next verse from whom he absolves the bride : "Her hue is blue and red : the fiend who clingeth close is driven off. Well thrive the kinsmen of this bride : the husband is bound fast in bonds."³ The husband himself is no more free. He is as much dependent on his wife as she on him. At this stage the bride gives away her woollen robe⁴ and other riches to Brahmin priests⁵ in dakṣiṇā as a consequence of which all inauspiciousness leaves her. Her very maiden misfortune, as though, leaves the bride and like herself is wedded to a kindly husband.⁶ Then follow two verses, 31-32, ensuring the safety of the route of the bride to her husband's home and then again the benedictions.

As members of both the parties pressed into the sacred enclosure to have a look at the bride, the priest addressed them thus : "Signs of good fortune mark the bride : come all of you and look at her. Wish her prosperity, and then return unto your homes again."⁷ This incident in later marital literature is technically called Sumangalī which word has endured till now. The term actually occurs in the above hymn. The

¹ गृहान्नाच्छ गृहपत्नी यथासौ वशिनी त्वं विदथसा वदासि ॥ R̥V., X. 85, 26.

² इह प्रियं प्रजया ते समृध्यतामस्मिन्गृहे गार्हपत्याय जांगृहि ।

एता पत्या तन्वं सं सुजस्वाधाजित्री विदथसा वदाथः ॥ ibid., 27.

³ ibid., 28.

⁴ सामुल्यं ibid., 29.

⁵ ब्रह्मभ्यो वि भजा वसु । ibid.

⁶ कृत्यैषा पद्वती भूत्या जाया विशते पतिम् ॥ ibid.

⁷ सुमङ्गलीरियं वधूरिमां समेत पश्यत ।

सौभाग्यमस्यै दत्वायाथास्तं वि परेतन ॥ ibid., 33.

garments of the bride were at this stage given away to the priest. Her robe was no longer fit for use and the priest advised her : "Pungent is this and bitter this, filled, as it were, with arrow-barbs, empoisoned and not fit to eat. The Brahman who knows Sūryā well deserves the garment of the bride.¹ The fringe, the cloth that decks her head, and then the triply-parted robe,—behold the hues which Sūryā wears : these doth the Brahman purify."²

After the elders had blessed her, the husband took her hand in his and pointing out the moral object of the marriage addressed his wife : "I take thy hand in mine for happy fortune that thou mayest reach old age with me thy husband. Gods, Aryaman, Bhagn, Savitar, Purandhi, have given thee to be my household's mistress."³ Again the husband invokes Pūṣan to bless him and his wife in their affection : "O Pūṣan, send her on as most auspicious, her who shall be the sharer of my pleasures ; her who shall twine her loving arms about me, and welcome all my love and mine embraces."⁴

In verses 38-39 the priest again invokes Agni : "For thee, with bridal train, they, first, escorted Sūryā to her home. Give to the husband in return, Agni, the wife with progeny.⁵ Agni hath given the bride again with splendour and with ample life. Long-lived be he who is her lord ; a hundred autumns let him live."⁶ The husband turned to his wife again and

¹ तृष्टमेतत्कटुकमेतदपाष्टवद्विषवन्तैतदत्तवे ।

सूर्या यो ब्रह्मा विद्यात्स द्वाधूयमर्हति ॥ RV., X. 85, 84.

² आशसनं विशसनमथो अधिविकर्तनम् ।

सूर्यायाः पश्य रूपाणि तानि ब्रह्मा तु शुन्धति ॥ ibid., 85.

³ गृह्णामि ते सौभगत्वाय हस्तं मया पत्या जरदष्टिर्यथासः ।

भगो अर्यमा सविता पुरन्धिर्नह्यं त्वादुर्गर्हिपत्याय देवाः ॥ ibid., 86.

⁴ तां पूषच्छिवतमामेरयस्व यस्यां बीजं मनुष्या वपन्ति ।

या न ऊरू उशती विश्रयाते । यस्यामुशन्तः प्रहराम शेषम् ॥ ibid., 87.

⁵ तुभ्यमग्ने पर्यवहत्सूर्यां वहतुना सह ।

पुनः पतिभ्यो जायां दा अग्ने प्रजया सह ॥ ibid., 88.

⁶ पुनः पत्नीमग्निरदादायुषा सह वर्चसा ।

दीर्घायुरस्या यः पतिर्जावति शरदः शतम् ॥ ibid., 89.

addressed his wife in two verses, 40-41, which logically should have come before or after the verses 21-22, as follows : "Soma obtained her first of all ; next the Gandharva was her lord. Agni was thy third husband : now one born of woman is thy husband.¹ Soma to the Gandharva, and to Agni the Gandharva gave : and Agni hath bestowed on me riches and sons and this my spouse."² In course of the next six verses 42-47 the formulæ were repeated when the bridegroom had returned with his bride to his father's home, and offered sacrifice. The couple are addressed first, and then the bride is exhorted and blessed.

The priest in solemn tone abjured the pair to keep close to each other and to part never. "Be ye not parted ;" said he, "dwell ye here ; reach the full time of human life. With sons and grandsons sport and play, rejoicing in your own abode."³ Verse 43 seems to have been addressed to the bride by the bridegroom. In tender simple words the husband says : "So may Prajāpati bring children forth to us ; may Aryaman adorn us till old age come nigh. Not inauspicious enter thou thy husband's house : bring blessing to our bipeds and our quadrupeds."⁴ In this speech the husband gives over to his wife the charge of his entire household. The priest of the bridegroom's party joined his voice with the husband's and welcomed the new wife, "Come, O desired of the gods, beautiful one with tender heart, with the charming look, good towards your husband, kind towards animals, destined to bring forth heroes. May you bring happiness for both our quadrupeds and bipeds."⁵

¹ सोमः प्रथमो विविदे गन्धर्वो विविद उत्तरः ।

तृतीयो अग्निष्टे पतिस्तुरीयस्ते मनुष्यजाः ॥ RV., X. 85, 40.

² सोमो ददद्गन्धर्वाय गन्धर्वो दददग्नये ।

रयिं च पुत्राश्चादादग्निर्महामयो इमाम् ॥ ibid., 41.

³ इहैव रतं मा वि यीष्टं विव्रमायुर्व्यश्नम् ।

श्रीळन्ती पुत्रैर्नप्तुभिर्मोदमानौ स्वे गृहे ॥ ibid., 42

⁴ आ नः प्रजां जनयतु प्रजापतिराजसाय समनक्तवर्यमा ।

अदुर्मङ्गलीः पतिलोकमा विश शं नो भव द्विपदे शं चतुष्पदे ॥ ibid., 43.

⁵ अघोरचक्षुरपतिष्येधि शिवा पशूभ्यः सुमनाः सुवर्चाः ।

वीरसूदेवकामा स्योना शं नो भव द्विपदे शं चतुष्पदे ॥ ibid., 44.

The priest getting further alive to the duties and rights of the bride and of her status in the new home, raised his voice and in a sweet tempered speech invoked Indra, to make her 'blest in her sons and fortunate' and to 'vouchsafe to her ten sons, and make her husband the eleventh man'¹; and then turning to the bride he spoke of the nature of her charge in a grave authoritative tone: "Over thy husband's father and thy husband's mother bear full sway. Over the sister of thy lord, over his brothers rule supreme."² Here the charge is completed and the newly wedded wife is made the full owner and vigorous mistress of the house of her husband. It seems that the bride directly took charge of responsibility of the new home from her mother-in-law just as her husband took over the manly responsibilities of his race from his father. Nay, the entire inmates of the house—the quadrupeds and bipeds, youngsters and elders, both male and female—became henceforth the concern of the new wife. She became the empress (samrājñī) of her new domain. Now there remained only one thing more to be sought for and ensured—the complete fusion of the hearts of the wife and the husband. And both therefore kneeling, knee to knee, and uniting their tones uttered the impassioned prayer in a ringing tender voice: "So may the Universal gods, so may the Waters join our hearts. May Mātariśvan, Dhātār, and Deśtrī together bind us close."³

Where could the majesty of marriage be better expressed than in this bridal hymn, the kindly and grave invocation of the bridegroom, the deep tenderness of the bride touching even the animals, and the conjugal devotion and the impressive stateliness and imperious dignity of womanhood? The main features of the R̥gvedic marriage ceremony are still preserved

¹ इमो त्वमिन्द्र मीदवः सुपुत्रां सुभगां कृणु ।

दशस्यां पुत्रानां षेहि पतिमेकादशं कृधि ॥ R̥V., X. 85, 45.

² सम्राज्ञी स्वशुरे भव सम्राज्ञी स्वश्वदां भव ।

ननान्दरि सम्राज्ञी भव सम्राज्ञी अधि देवेषु ॥ ibid., 46.

³ समञ्जन्तु विश्वे देवाः समापो हृदयानि नो ।

सं मातरिश्वा सं धाता समु देष्ट्री दधातु नो ॥ ibid., 47.

in the marital rites of the Hindus and they have endured well for the last several millennia.

When the marriage ceremony was over the bride was escorted by her groomsmen to her husband's home where some other rites completing her marriage awaited her ;
 Departure of the Bride part of these has already been alluded to in course of the analysis of the hymn regarding Sūryā's bridal above. She mounted a beautiful car made of silk-cotton wood, yellow coloured, decked with railings, canopy and red flowers and drawn by two white bulls. The details of the outfit of the chariot have already been described above. As the chariot drove off chants and prayers were crooned¹ to make the highway on which the pair was to journey free from lurking dangers and other obstacles. "Straight in direction be the paths," blessed the priest, "and thornless, whereon our fellows travel to the wooing (and back). Let Aryaman and Bhaga lead us : perfect, O gods, the union of the wife and husband."² The priest continues, "Let not the highway thieves who lie in ambush find the wedded pair. By pleasant ways let them escape the danger, and let foes depart."³ Then he prayed to undo the effect of the diseases and other inauspicious and ungodly impediments : "Diseases, which from various folk follow the bride's resplendent train,—these let the holy gods again bear to the place from which they came."⁴

Of the post-marriage rites which the newly married couple had to perform the chief was one relating to the consummation of marriage. Soon after the arrival at the husband's dwelling the pair proceeded to consummate their marriage. The purpose of marriage

¹ RV., X, 85, 28. 92.

² अनुसारा ऋजवः सन्तु पन्था येभिः सखायो यन्ति नो वरेयम् ।
 समयमासम्भगो नो निनीयात्सं जास्पत्यं सुयममस्तु देवाः ॥ ibid., 28.

³ मा विदम्परिपन्थिनो य आसीदन्ति दम्पती ।
 सुमेभिर्बुर्गमतीतामपद्रत्स्वरातयः ॥ ibid., 92.

⁴ ये वध्वश्चन्द्रं बहून् यक्ष्मा यन्ति जनादनु ।
 पुनस्तान्यक्षिया देवा नयन्तु मतभागताः ॥ ibid., 81.

has already been discussed above as being one of procreating children and perpetuating the race. But every act of the R̥gvedic Aryan was impregnated with symbolism and was supposed to have divine sanction behind it. Everything must be done with the aid of sacraments and in profound dignity. And now therefore when the husband proceeded to become intimate with his wife he approached the nuptial bed with due ceremony. It was not the stifled passion of two beasts waiting for the hour let loose but an act the sanctity of which was upheld with sacred mantras. The stages of the development of the bride's physique were presided over by divine forces of which we have already treated above. Soma was the deity who held sway over her first of all when the various humours of her body shaped her proper form.¹ Then she came under the charge of the Gandharva,² who having endowed her with accomplishments gave over to Agni,³ who animated her and made herself yield to her last husband, one born of a woman.⁴ It is to be noted that all the four have been referred to as husbands.⁵ The order, however, has been changed in the Brāhmaṇa literature where the husband takes the charge from the Gandharva and not from Agni. The R̥gvedic poet does not seem to have been very careful on this point as he clearly gives the order noted above⁶ while he is equally explicit and emphatic in upholding the order of the Brāhmaṇa literature and in acting as its forerunner. Here again the earthly husband takes charge of his bride not from Agni but from the Viśvāvasu Gandharva.⁷ On the association of Gandharva with the Aryan marriage Macdonell observes, "The union of Gandharva with the water nymph is typical of marriage. He is therefore connected with the

¹ सोमः प्रथमो विविदे R̥V., X. 85, 40.

² गन्धर्वो विविद उत्तरः । ibid.

³ तृतीयो अग्निष्टे पतिः ibid.

⁴ तुरीयस्ते मनुष्यजाः ॥ ibid.

⁵ ibid.

⁶ ibid., 40-41.

⁷ ibid., 21-22.

wedding ceremony, and the unmarried maiden is said to belong to Gandharva as well as to Soma and Agni (10, 85, 40-1). The Gandharva Viśvāvasu in the first days of wedlock is regarded as a rival of the husband (ib. 22), and the Gandharvas' love of women is prominent in later texts (cp. MS. 8, 73). The Gandharvas and Apsarases thus preside over fertility and are prayed to by those who desire offspring (Pāṇcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, 19, 32)."¹

After the first four days following the marriage the husband approached his wife lying on her bed by the side of a rod symbolizing the Viśvāvasu Gandharva and acting as the witness of the couple's abstinence. He put his foot on the bed and addressed the rod in the following words :

"Rise up from hence : this maiden hath a husband. I laud Viśvāvasu with hymns and homage. Seek in her father's home another fair one, and find the portion from of old assigned thee."²

"Rise up from hence, Viśvāvasu : with reverence we worship thee. Seek thou another willing maid, and with her husband leave the bride."³

The prayer over, he removed the rod from the bed, stepped into it and united his body with that of his wife with a view to propagate his race. The Atharva Veda even furnishes details of the union and gives formulæ and prayers to be addressed to the male genital (śiśnadeva) itself in the manner of a deity.

The wedding dress of the bride is not specifically described, but mention is made of the pre and post marriage dress of the bride. It seems that she put on a woollen dress⁴ on the eve of actual marriage. This dress

¹ Vedic Mythology, p. 187.

² उदीर्ष्वतः पतिवती ह्येषा विश्वावसुं नमसा गीभिरीळे ।

अन्यामिच्छ पितृषद व्यक्तां स ते भागो जनुषा तस्य विद्धि ॥ RV., X. 85, 21.

³ उदीर्ष्वतो विश्वावसो नमसेळामहे त्वा ।

अन्यामिच्छ प्रफर्व्य सञ्जायां पत्यासृज ॥ ibid., 22.

⁴ सामुल्य ibid., 29.

was not considered auspicious,¹ but pungent, bitter, filled, as it were, with arrow-barbs, empoisoned and not fit for her use.² It was given away to the officiating priest³ who well deserved it.⁴ Then the bride put on a lovely robe⁵ coloured in several hues.⁶ There seem to have been three items of her dress—the fringe or the border cloth (āsasanam) which was perhaps an over-garment, the head-cloth (viśasanam) and the under-garment or the divided skirt⁷ (adhivikartanam), the same as the sāmulya,⁸ the woollen lower garment. This post-marriage mantle was an auspicious robe purified by Brahmā⁹ and was fit for the use of the bride in contrast with one which she wore before the marriage to which there were possibilities of female fiends sticking.¹⁰ The R̥gvedic custom of the bride's robe being given away before the Pāṇigrahaṇa still endures but with the distinction that it is not given to the priest but to the barbar aiding the nuptial ceremonies.

We have marshalled in the foregoing pages enough material which may give an idea as to the purport and necessity of Aryan marriage. The R̥gvedic priest and seer knows of no nobler and more tender relation than that existing between the kindly husband and his devoted wife. She is praised as the very home and bliss of his hearth. This condition of life can be comprehensible only if love was the basis of marriage and religious duty the end of it. It was always a *willing*¹¹ bride that was given away in

Some remarks
about marriage

¹ cf. R̥V., X. 85, 29.

² ibid., 84.

³ सूर्या यो ब्रह्मा विद्यात्स इन्द्राधूयमर्हति ॥ ibid.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ ibid., 6.

⁶ रूपानि ibid., 85.

⁷ ibid.

⁸ ibid., 29.

⁹ तानि ब्रह्मा तु शुन्धति ॥ ibid., 85.

¹⁰ cf. ibid., 28-30.

¹¹ शंसती मनसा ibid., 9.

marriage. "Win thou his heart and let him win thy fancy ; and he shall form with thee a blest alliance"¹ was the ideal on which the marriage and the home rested. This idea was so closely adhered to that in the absence of it we read of a rupture in relations of a wife and her husband. The story of Purūravā yearning for the fleeing Urvaśī may be quoted for an instance. The nymph looks down and reproaches the entreaties of the king : "Go home again thou fool, thou hast not 'won me.'"² This marriage had been contracted on the stipulations of an agreement and in it the winning of hearts, which was a necessary precedent in the R̥gvedic marriage, had not been an antecedent feature. In such a companionship when the infatuated man embraced his woman thrice a day she received each time coldly his fond embraces and to his desires she yielded only her body³ but never her spirit. On the contrary it was the ardent desire of the husband to wed a wife, 'who should twine her loving arms about him and welcome all his love and embraces.'⁴ Thus the winning of hearts was a necessary preliminary to marriage. The poet sings : "In pride of beauty like a maid thou goest, O goddess, to the god who longs to win thee. And smiling, youthful, as thou shinest brightly, before him thou discoverest thy bosom." "Loveless marriages," rightly observes Oscar Wilde, "are horrible. But there is one thing worse than an absolutely loveless marriage. A marriage in which there is love, but on one side only ; and in which of the two hearts one is sure to be broken." The R̥gvedic society knew of no such relation between the husband and wife.

Love, the foundation of marriage, itself had become sanctified. It was not only walking round a rose garden in the bright moonshine ; it was living together and working together.

¹ तस्य वा त्वं मन इच्छा स वा तवाद्या ऋषुष्व सविदं सुमद्राम् ॥ R̥V., X. 10, 14.

² परेह्यस्तं नहि मूर मापः ॥ ibid., X. 95, 18.

³ त्रिः स्म माह्वः वनययो वैतसेनो तस्म मेऽव्यत्यै पूणासि ।

पुरुर्वोजु ते केतमायं राजा मे वीर तत्त्वस्तदासीः ॥ ibid., 5.

⁴ या न ऊरु जगती विश्वयाते यस्यामुशन्तः प्रहरामं शेषम् ॥ ibid., X. 86, 87.

It entailed great responsibilities, both spiritual and temporal. Honeymoon is trifling in the scheme of a wedded life and is absolutely incapable of satisfying the deep needs of men and women. These needs are not always easy to understand. Even to ourselves we are strangers—such are the complexities of life. The Aryans married not so much for love as for higher and more permanent needs, for the propagation of their race, and they were 'bound for the world of life immortal'¹ and 'to the world of virtuous action.'² The bride was a veritable Arundhati—one who never obstructs. The passage—'perfect, O gods, the wife and the husband'³—points to the same idea and so also does the following :

"Be ye not parted ; dwell ye here, reach the full time of human life.

With sons and grandsons sport and play, rejoicing in your abode."⁴

¹ अमृतस्य लोकं RV., X. 85, 20.

² सुकृतस्य ibid., 24.

³ सं जास्पत्यं सुयममस्तु देवाः II. ibid., 28.

⁴ ibid., 42.

CHAPTER IV

MARRIAGE—ITS FEATURES, CUSTOMS AND USAGES

In the R̥gveda we get several features of marriage and we have references in this Samhitā, direct and indirect, to the existence of widows and their remarriage, the custom of suttee or widow-burning, beginnings of the later levirate (niyoga), monogamy, polygamy, polyandry, and incest comprising of marriages between brother and sister and connections between father and daughter and mother and son. The evidence is mostly of an inconclusive nature and the material absolutely scarce. The text at places suffers from apparent contradictions and the task of the historian becomes difficult which is further rendered complex by the obscurity of the sense of a passage. The similes, which generally refer to the mundane affairs of the R̥ṣi or the deity, frequently draw the scholar into the maze of a labyrinth and lead his reasoning to an absurd conclusion. Therefore the inferences and conclusions from such allusions can hardly be final.

There is no doubt about the fact that the free R̥gvedic society had needs of an endless type as is always the case with communities the resources, habits and ambitions of which have not become stagnated and been rendered stale by endurance. The early Aryan community was young and fresh. It had soon entered a new land from beyond the Hindukush where it had lived and fought with races, akin and foreign, and with which it had only recently severed its connection. Naturally it must have imbibed social features peculiar to other races and shed its own influence over them. This existence of mutual influences among races must account for the diversity of customs which very often look foreign to the Aryan usage. It is futile to argue that a particular trait is not one of a certain race as it has not been a permanent feature with that race while the same has been a characteristic one of a certain other. The fact is that in the long life-time of a race several traits and features are acquired, developed and perpetuated. They sometimes grow from within and at times are imported from without. These traits sometimes endure and sometimes die out. Therefore the argument is indeed feeble which says that a particular feature, since it is acquired from elsewhere, is foreign to a certain race. The endeavour should always be to properly weigh such customs and locate them in their due place, to draw inferences which are not prejudicial and to trace them, if possible, to their earlier environments.

We shall deal with the above enumerated social features one by one. The existence of widows is warranted by a few passages of the Rgveda. These references, however, are few and far between, nevertheless they do reflect a condition of society in which widows, howsoever small their number, had a place. A verse reads: "Kṛṣa and Śayu ye protect, ye Ásvins twain: ye two assist the widow and the worshipper."¹ This reference clearly shows the existence of widows who had not remarried. In another passage² a similar state of a particular widow is referred to. In it an enquiry is made as to who it was that made Indra's mother a widow. We find an indirect allusion to the widows living in the society in verse 7 of the funeral hymn³ of the tenth book. The verse may be quoted in full to bring out its purport clearly:

"Let these unwidowed, dames with noble husbands adorn themselves with fragrant balm and unguent.

Decked with fair jewels, tearless, free from sorrow, first let the matrons pass unto their house."⁴

¹ युवं ह कृशं युवमदिवना शयुं युवं विषन्तं विषवामुरुष्यथः । RV., X. 40, 8.

² ibid., IV. 18, 12—कस्ते मातरं विषवामचक्रच्छयुं.

³ ibid., X. 18.

⁴ इमा नारीरविषवाः सुपत्नीराञ्जनेन सर्पिषा सं विशन्तु ।

अनश्रवोज्जसीवाः सुरत्ना आ रोहन्तु जनयो योनिमग्ने ॥ ibid., X. 18, 7.

In this verse a procession of married women in coverture (nārīravīdhavāḥ supatnīḥ) is described. It seems that like one in modern Hindu society the widow in the R̥gvedic community also suffered the privation of being kept away from auspicious ceremonies. The present occasion was one of the remarriage of a widow whose husband had just died and who was yet lying by the side of the dead man. The sad occasion was at once turned into a happy and auspicious one. The procession of ladies in coverture (nārīravīdhavāḥ) was perhaps expected to decorate the widow for her remarriage and so on this auspicious occasion the presence of widows was deprecated. The poet, therefore, expects only such ladies to form the procession as were unwidowed dames. The phrase nārīravīdhavāḥ thus implies such widows as were extant in the society and had not remarried.

We find that in a work of the bulk of the R̥gveda instances of widows are but a few. Although negative evidence does not conclusively prove the authenticity of a proposition, it may be asserted with ample certainty in the present case that this negative evidence when coupled with other additional data establishes the fact that the number of widows was almost negligible, for, as we shall see below, most of the widows of child-bearing age were absorbed in the society by remarriage.

The extreme need of men to protect the newly colonized land from the frequent inroads of its earlier masters, the aboriginal Dāsas and Dasyus, and to push the Aryan expansion eastwards would not leave the child-bearing widow by herself. It would seem that almost always she was remarried to the younger brother of her husband or his near kinsmen soon after his demise as this is borne out by a particular rite in the funeral hymn¹ of the R̥gveda. When the husband died and his dead body was taken to the cremation ground or the cemetery either to be burnt on the funeral pyre or to be entombed, his widow also accompanied it with unwidowed dames and other members of her family and the community. She was then asked to lie down by the side of the corpse of her husband. This was a remnant funeral rite of a remote ago of which we shall have occasion to discuss below. While she thus lay there her relations gathered round the remains of her husband 'whom time had struck down'¹ and they 'according to their age made efforts to bear him to the grave.'² 'Unwidowed dames married to noble husbands, adorned with fragrant balm and unguent and with fair jewels, tearless, free from sorrow,'³ then gathered before the blazing fire and proceeded to decorate the new widow for a new life. She was to be married at once and so the priest addressed her, "Rise, come unto the world of life, O woman : come he is lifeless by whose side thou liest. Wifehood with this thy husband was thy portion, who took thy hand and wooed thee as a lover."⁴ The husband's brother who thus married her observed while taking away the bow from the hand of the deceased, "From his dead hand I take the bow he carried, that it may be our power and might and glory. There art thou, there ; and here with noble heroes may we overcome all hosts that fight against us."⁵ In this manner the brother of the deceased inherited the command of his people through the bow, the dead hero appearing to be a Ksatriya of the princely order, and of the household through his sister-in-law whom he married (didhiṣu—wooer). It is in the fitness of things that the danger of war may have been hinted at in the very verse following one in which the widow is asked to return to the world of the living. "There art thou, there" ; says the brother of the dead hero, "and here with noble heroes may we overcome all hosts that fight against us."⁶ The perils of war could be combated

¹ RV., X.18, 8.

¹ RV., X. 18, 2. 8.

² ibid., 8.

³ ibid., 7.

⁴ उदीर्ष्व नार्यमि जीवलोकं गतासुमेतमुम शेष एहि ।
हस्तग्राभस्य दिधिषोस्तवेदं मत्युर्जनित्वममि सं बभूय ॥ ibid., 8.

⁵ अत्रैव त्वमिह वयं सुवीरा विद्मवाः स्पृधो अभिमतीर्जयेम ॥ ibid., 9.

⁶ ibid.

to a great extent with the increase of numerical strength of the community and this could be ensured only when there were enough mothers to bear male children. The existence of widows of child-bearing age would indeed cost the Rġvedic Aryan dearly and so he utilized her by marrying her at once. She could not remain a widow even for a day. The purpose of her existence is alluded to in the phrase 'with noble heroes,'¹ heroes whom she was to bear hereafter as the wife of, her brother-in-law.

Thus soon after the death of the husband the widow was married to another man, probably a brother-in-law, even before the obsequies ended and the dead body was disposed of. We are not sure if an actual ceremony of marriage was performed but it would seem that at least the widow rose and caught the hand of her brother-in-law and thus became his legal wife. This marriage actually formed one of the funeral rites. It looks, however, inhuman on the part of the widow to give herself up to a life of married pleasures, to an existence of mirth and merriment just after the demise of her beloved spouse. For, even now, when we have unlearned to respect our women, much more the widow, we do not marry by the burning pyre, how, one wonders, it could have been possible to wed a wailing widow at a time which witnessed the glory of women. If it was really so, the custom must have occasionally resulted in deliberate crimes. It may have been possible for a depraved woman to make sinister attempts to hasten the death of an unwanted husband and to get rid of him for marrying a paramour who may have wooed her and carried on with her even in the lifetime of her husband. But such laxities, of course, are the fate of all communities. As to the sentiment, erring against human tenderness by marrying by the dead body of a deceased husband, it may be said that the Aryans were a gay, materialistic (at least much less spiritual than their later descendants) people and their intrepid martial spirit did not very much care for the partings through death. "We have come forth," says the R̥ṣi on the occasion of the burial, "for dancing and for laughter."¹ Everyday they fought and fell in the battle-field and it is possible that in order to keep down the number of their dead, and even to augment the number of fighting heroes, they at once took the widows as wives and started the propagation of their race afresh.

¹ सुवीरा RV., X. 18, 9.

We have another reference in the tenth book of the *R̥gveda*² in support of widow remarriage. The verse records :

"Where are ye Ásvins, in the evening, where at morn ? Where is your halting-place, where rest ye for the night ?

Who brings you homeward, as the widow bedward draws her husband's brother, as the bride attracts the groom ?"³

The evidence embodied in this verse refers to the customs generally obtaining in the society of the brother-in-law marrying his sister-in-law. The evidence is conclusive. The simile is very homely and has been drawn from commonplace incidents in the society where it was normal for the younger brother (devara) of the husband to make the widow of his brother his wife. The wife herself has been styled as *devṛkāmā*⁴ making her love natural for her brother-in-law as also her taking him for a second husband.

Mention is made in the R̥gveda of other widows also led to be remarried (gartāruh).⁵ The *Atharva Veda*⁶ alludes to already remarried widows, who in consequence of their remarriage obtained the flattering style of punarbhū, reborn, rejuvenated.

¹ प्राञ्चो अगाम नृतये हसाय द्राघीय आयुः प्रतरं दधानाः ॥ R̥V., X. 18, 8.

² ibid., X. 40, 2.

³ कुह स्विद्दोषा कुह वस्तोरश्विना कुहामिपित्वं करतः कुहोषतुः ।
को वां युञ्जा विधवेव देवरं मर्यं न योषा कृणुते सधस्थ आ ॥ ibid.

⁴ ibid., X. 85, 44.

⁵ ibid., I, 124, 7.

⁶ IX, 5, 28.

In the case of disappearance of her husband¹ a woman could consider herself a widow and could marry a new husband in the manner of a widow.

We have no evidence as to whether the widow remarriage was accompanied with any nuptial ceremonies similar to those that figured in the first marriage. If we are to go by the evidence we have, probably no further rituals were required to make the widow a legally married wife. She was directly taken from the side of her dead husband and further begetting on her of heroes was hinted at. It was enough perhaps to make a widow his wife when her brother-in-law took her hand in his before the assembled witnesses who attested to the fresh status of the widow. The procession of the unwidowed dames itself would suggest that a second marriage of the widow did not entail the performance of the various nuptial rites.

The question of widow remarriage brings that of widow burning to the fore for discussion. It is significant that in the whole range of the Rġveda there is not a single reference to the burning of the widow. It is very natural, for Burning of the Widow
the widows were absorbed in the society by remarriage. Macdonell thinks, however, that "Traces even survive (RV. 10, 188.9) which indicate that his widow and his weapons were once burnt with the body of the husband."² Elsewhere³ he observes, "The fact that in the funeral obsequies of the Rġveda the widow lies down beside the body of her husband and his bow is removed from the dead man's hand, shows that both were in earlier times burnt with his body to accompany him to the next world, and a verse of the Atharvaveda calls the dying of the widow with her husband an old custom. The evidence of anthropology shows that this was a very primitive practice widely prevailing at the funeral of military chiefs, and it can be proved to go back to the Indo-European age." These remarks are based on a verse¹ of the Rgveda which reads as follows: "Rise, come unto the world of life, O woman; come, he is lifeless by whose side thou liest."² But this part of the verse is soon followed up by the next line which gives the widow immediately away in marriage to the man who woos her. It reads: "Wifehood with this thy husband was thy portion, who took thy hand and wooed thee as a lover."³ The allusion to the lying down of the widow by the side of the remains of her husband's body contained in the earlier part of the verse may be taken to be referring to a feature of the earlier times when widows may have been burnt along with the dead body of their husbands. There is actually a verse contained in the *Atharva Veda*⁴ which preserves such a custom of burning the widow and which it calls an ancient religious duty (dharmaṁ purāṇam). It is probable that the ancient custom against which the Atharva Veda raises a banner of revolt on humanitarian grounds had already grown too old to be followed during the time which the Rgveda depicts. But although the old custom had been given up the rites of its occasion, it would seem, still persisted and the procession of unwidowed women to adorn the widow for the company of the dead husband became one to deck her as a new bride. The process must have become very mechanical and sad for it is hardly human to be changed from a widow to a bride immediately after the death of the nearest relative and supporter of a woman even in the gay conditions of the Rgvedic society.

¹ RV., VI. 49, 8.

² Vedic Mythology, p. 165.

³ History of Sanskrit Literature.

The preceding verse⁵ has a passage—ārohanṭu yonimagre—which has a special interest, because, as Kaegi remarks,⁶ "with

¹ X. 18, 8.

² ibid.

³ ibid.,

⁴ इयं नारी पतिलोकं वृणाना निपद्यत उपत्वा मर्त्यं प्रेतम् ।

धर्मं पुराणं अनुपालयन्ती तस्यै प्रजां द्रविणं चेह वेहि ॥ XVIII. 8, 1.

⁵ RV., X. 18, 7.

⁶ The Rigveda, p. 171.

a very slight forgery it would give the highest sanction, the Vedic authority, for the custom of burning the widow on the grave of the husband." It is, however, correctly pointed out that the following verse contains an allusion to the ancient custom of burning the widow along with the remains of her dead husband. Nor is the allusion solitary and exclusive. We have already referred to the verse of the Atharva Veda which calls the custom an ancient one. And we know for certain that "widow-burning was practised among many primitive Indo-Germanic races in Asia and Europe,¹ and it can only be expected to have existed among the early Indo-Āryans in some form or other."² "But" observes Prof. Sarkar, "the Vedic literature shows very few traces of such a custom: partly no doubt because these texts are priestly in character, and widow burning is known to have prevailed elsewhere mainly amongst non-priestly warrior families; and partly because even amongst the ruling classes, cases of widow-burning were rare (and prevented) throughout the Vedic period,—as shown by authentic Kṣatriya dynastic traditions; while in the 'brāhman' society sex-relations seem to have been too lax to admit of the prevalence of such a practice."³ Besides, as we have remarked elsewhere women in the society were very dear and their existence was necessary for the physical as well as religious needs of the Aryan. Another reason why the custom must not have been current is the useless waste of life. Most of the military chiefs were polygamous and many had hundreds of wives, both Āryan and non-Āryan, as we shall see in due context, and the custom, had it obtained, would have involved a colossal waste and would have proved a great drain on the meagre resources of the society. On the contrary, we find the services of the widow utilized immediately after her widowhood by bestowing her on a near kinsman of her deceased husband.¹ The recurrence of the custom in much later times may have been caused by new reasons. It may have been due to the jealousy of the husbands eager to preserve the chastity of their wives from the foreign intruders who mostly came without wives and appropriated Indian women. Again it may have been an easy custom to practise when respect for women had much waned and when they had come to be considered as chattels to be used without any resistance or remonstrance. The increase of women became appalling in the later Hindu society and already during the time of Bhartṛhari women had come to be spoken of 'as incapable of being chaste,'² when the adolescent daughters had come to be 'compared to a basket of snakes which the father has to carry.'³ The widows in the society were surely those who had become such after the child-bearing age or considerably later.

¹ Herodotos: IV, 71 (Scythian); V. 5 (Thracian); Porcypius (De Bello Gothico): II. 14 (Gothic); Weinhold: Altnord. Leb., 476ff. (German); cf. Zimmer: Alt. Leb., 881.

² Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. His. of Ind., p. 82.

³ ibid.

Thus it is clear that unlike the widow of to-day, the most miserable creature of the Hindu society about whom the great Urdu poet Hali writes feelingly—Jisne hai raṇḍāpā jhelā, ḍar use hai dozakh kā kyā?—her Ṛgvedic sister enjoyed more freely the air of liberty and the dictates of her conscience, and when remarried, she was a full-fledged wife meant 'for love, progeny and prosperity.'⁴

The chief object of marriage being the propagation of race by procreating children, the woman was always looked upon as a potential mother. Her motherhood was the most distinguished trait in a woman. The begetting of children was considered so very important that the impotency, absence or death of a husband was no bar to her giving birth to children. This makeshift was termed as Niyoga in later literature. It implied the begetting of a

¹ RV., X. 18, 8.

² V. N. Mehta : Foreword to Women in Rigveda, 1st Edition, p. iv.

³ ibid.

⁴ RV., X. 18, 8.

male child on a married woman through agencies other than her husband. The term itself is of a later origin as mentioned above but its implications were freely practised in the Rġvedic times. Frequent allusions are made in the Rġveda to the practice of levirate (Niyoga). We read of Purukutsānī obtaining a son¹ in the absence of her husband, who had been imprisoned elsewhere. We have several references² to the wives of weaklings procuring children from agencies other than their legally married husbands. Thus Purandhi Vadhramatī obtained a son during the impotency of her husband.³ Likewise another wife is said to have been granted offspring while her husband was a weakling. The text reads in praise of the Āśvins: "Ye, mounted on your chariot brought to Vimada the comely maid of Purumitra as a bride. Ye came unto the calling of the weakling's dame and granted noble offspring to the happy wife."⁴ Again the Āśvins are praised to have given a son Hiranyabasta to another weakling's consort.⁵

Although niyoga could be practised on a woman by any kinsman of her husband, her brother-in-law (devara) seems to have been the favourite and the first preference. The widow, as we have seen in the foregoing pages, is generally married to him.⁶ Even during the life-time of her husband he is generally the favourite. It is significant that while the bride is being married and the point of her husband's unfitness for cohabitation with her is yet in no way explicit, she is qualified with the adjective devrkāmā, desirous of a union with her

¹ अस्माकमत्र पितरस्त आसन्त्सप्त ऋषयो दौर्गहे बध्यमाने ।

त आयजन्त त्रसदस्युमस्या इन्द्रं न वृत्रतुरमर्षदेवम् ॥ RV., IV. 42, 8.

पुष्कुत्सानी हि वामदाशद्व्योभिरिन्द्रावक्षणा नमोभिः ।

अथाराजानं त्रसदस्युमस्या वृत्रहणं ददथुरर्षदेवम् ॥ ibid., 9.

² ibid., I. 116, 18 ; 117, 24 ; VI. 62, 7 ; X. 89, 7 ; cf. X. 65, 12.

³ ibid.

⁴ युवं रथेन विमदाय शुन्ध्युवं न्यूह्युः पुरमित्रस्य योषणाम् ।

युवं हवं वधिमत्या अगच्छतं युवं सुपतिं चक्रुः पुरन्धवे ॥ ibid., X. 89, 7.

⁵ ibid., I. 117, 24.

⁶ ibid., X. 18, 8 ; 40, 2.

devara or husband's brother. The phrase devṛkāmā occurs in the sacred hymn which treats of the wedding of Sūryā,¹ the daughter of the sun-god Savitā. It may also incidentally be suggested that the devara was normally looked upon as a possible husband after the death or in the absence of his brother and perhaps a second husband even during his brother's life-time. It may be noted here in this connection that almost all over northern India the devara, brother-in-law, and his sister-in-law, elder brother's wife, are socially free to cut jokes not always civil or dignified between themselves. This would suggest the existence of sexual proximity of the two which when no more sanctioned in a later age is found to develop into hilarious expressions exchanged between them. This point becomes very significant when considered along with the taboo that exists even to-day against the husband's elder brother.

Marrying only one wife was generally the order of the day, although we come across instances of polygamy very frequently. As we shall see in due context, polygamy was not an uncommon practice and it was mostly obtaining among the military chiefs, princely families and the influential ṛsis. But the masses, the common population called the viśaḥ, normally married a single wife. There are references in the R̥gveda, too many to be quoted here, showing that monogamy was the rule and polygamy only an exception, although an abnormal exception freely contracted and extensively in vogue. Monogamy, however, was the normal usage.

The Yajamāna, sacrificer, appeared along with his only wife, and not he alone but also the gods that he invoked came in single pairs. The bride entering the house of her father-in-law as a worthy wife was asked to reign over the mother-in-law and the father-in-law and over the sisters-in-law and the brothers-in-law.² This was possible only if a single wife was the object of this address of the priest, for her authority in her new dominions which she acquired through marriage was uncontrolled and undivided, wholly absolute. The ideal was a 'never parting'¹ 'united pair'² 'sharing the same married pleasures',³ and the happiness of the married couple lay in 'the twining of their arms about each other'⁴ and in 'each welcoming the love and embraces of the other.'⁵ Except for a few exceptions we generally find the reference to the wife in the Rġveda made in the singular number.⁶ The fond dame attires herself for her husband.⁷ Gods Aryaman, Bhaga, Savitar, Purandhi give the only wife over to the husband to be the mistress of his household⁸ (gārhapatyāya). It is a single wife that lies down by the body of her dead husband during the performance of the obsequies.⁹ With a few exceptions, for instance the polygamous Indra, most of the gods—Varuna, Agni, Soma, Sarasvān—are married to a single wife.

¹ RV., X. 85, 44.

² ibid., 46.

This typical Aryan trait of monogamous marriage finds frequent mention in the Rġveda. But the prevalence of polygamy side by side would point to the weakening of the adherence to this earlier practice. It appears that the custom of monogamy slackened in course of time when the Indo-Aryan gradually embarked upon a career not only of colonizing the interior but also on that of spreading his culture among the aboriginies of India. It is significant that the references to polygamy are mostly found in those books of the Rġveda which have been declared by scholars to be of a later period. It is consequently not very improbable that when the Indo-

¹ मा वि योष्टं RV., X. 85, 42.

² समापो हृदयानि नौ । ibid., 47 ; cf. ibid., 28 and 27.

³ ibid., 87.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ ibid.

⁶ ibid., I. 124, 7 ; IV. 8, 2 ; X. 71, 4 ; 85, 86 ; 105, 8, etc.

⁷ जायेन पत्य उवासी सुवासा । ibid., I. 124, 7 ; cf. IV. 8, 2 ; X. 71, 4.

⁸ ibid., X. 85, 86.

⁹ ibid., X. 18, 8.

Aryan came closest to the non-Aryan, some of the latter's customs may have slipped into the social fabric of the former. And in an age of struggle and strife the victorious leaders of the battle-field are naturally tempted to appropriate to themselves the belles of the enemy. Such instances are innumerable in the history of India down through the centuries. It was as true with the Indo-Aryans, Śakas, Huns, Turks, Pathans and the Moghals as with the Portugese, the Dutch, the French and the British employees of the East India Company. Most of the cases of polygamy, as we shall see below, are those of slave girls taken as additional wives, and it is doubtful if really the free Aryan woman could have been induced to share the rule of the household with another save in very exceptional cases. And it may be noted that allusions to polygamy are made mostly either to military chiefs or to intellectual aristocrats. It may be doubted if such references have been made to ordinary citizens for whom monogamy always remained the ideal¹ as well as the practice.

We have already mentioned above that instances of polygamy are generally with reference to the opulent princes, their aristocratic nobles and their courtier priests. Instances, of course, are frequent and common a few of which may be quoted and discussed. In a passage² a simile

Polygamy has been drawn from yearning wives (patnīruṣatī) cleaving to their yearning husband (patnī uśantam). An interesting instance is contained in a verse in which the poet draws his simile from a man placed in a helpless and pitiable condition by his rival wives. The evidence reads: "Like rival wives (sapatnīriva) on every side enclosing ribs oppress me sore."³ The distress of the poor husband hard pressed between his two jealous and quarrelling wives is comic, if touching. Indra himself is said to be revelling among his

¹ RV., I. 124, 7; IV. 8, 2; X. 71, 4.

² ibid., I. 62, 11.

³ सं मा तपन्त्यभितः सपत्नीरिव पशवः । ibid., I. 105, 8; cf. ibid., X. 88, 2.

several wives¹ (janibhiḥ) like a king about which we shall refer at length below. Another passage refers to wives loving a single husband.² The hymn 62 of the *Rġveda*³ presents us another instance of the plurality of wives. It says, "For many thousand holy works the sisters wait on the haughty lord like wives (patnīḥ) and matrons (janayāḥ)."⁴ Again it has been mentioned that "Indra has taken and possesses all castles as one common husband (patirekaḥ sdmāno) does his spouses (janī-riva)."⁵ In another context we read the 'wives embracing their lord, the comely bridegroom.'⁶ Yet another amusing instance is preserved in the simile of a verse which records: "Between both poles the car-horse goes pressed closely, as in his dwelling moves the doubly wedded (dvijānīḥ)."⁷ A similar example is provided in the line: "He comes as the lord of women to the holy place."⁸ The list of such instances is difficult to exhaust and only a few more may be quoted to illustrate the point. A verse reads as follows: "Alone the babe sucked many a teeming bosom. Guard, for the bright and strong the fellow spouses, friendly to men and bound to him in kinship."⁹

Another verse refers to the multiplicity of wives in the following words: "The chieftain of the mighty stride whose mother, the many young dames, who never disregard him."¹⁰ The passage—"Those cows who yield unharmed, their nectar,

¹ राजेव हि जनिभिः क्षेप्येवावद्युभिरभि विदुष्कविः सन् । RV., VII. 18, 2.

² उप प्र जिव्वसुशतीरुशन्तं पतिं न नित्यं जनयः सनीळाः । ibid., I. 71, 1.

³ ibid., I. 62, 10.

⁴ पुरु सहस्रा जनयो न पत्नीर्दुवस्यन्ति स्वसारो अह्नयाणम् ॥ ibid.

⁵ जनीरिव पतिरेकः समानो नि मामृजे पुर इन्द्रः सु सर्वाः ॥ ibid., VII. 26, 8.

⁶ परिष्वजन्ते जनयो यथा पतिं मर्यं न शुल्क्युं मघवान् मृतये ॥ ibid., X. 48, 1.

⁷ उभे वुरी वल्लिरापिब्दमानोऽन्तर्योनेव चरति द्विजानिः । ibid., 101, 11.

⁸ नयन्नृतस्य प्रशिषो नवीयसीः पतिर्जनीनामुपयाति निष्कृतम् ॥ ibid., IX. 86, 92.

⁹ पितुश्च गर्भं जनितुश्च बभ्रे पूर्वरिको अघयत्पीप्यानाः ।

वृष्णे सपत्नी वृचये सबन्धू उभे अस्मै मनुष्येनि पाहि ॥ ibid., III. 1, 10.

¹⁰ उरुक्रमः ककुहो यस्य पूर्वीर्न मर्षन्ति युवतयो जनित्रीः ॥ ibid., 54, 14.

spouses of the far strider, ever young united"¹ —refers to the same practice. A verse praises Vaiśvānara as 'celestial, truly mighty, most manly, having many a youthful consort.'² Another indirect reference points to the same custom thus: "For him they lengthen prayers and acts of worship, the mothers weave garments for him, their offspring."³ A conclusive instance may be read in the verse: "Rejoicing in the steer's impregnable contact, his spouses move on paths of heaven to meet him."⁴

So also is the text reading, "The maidens with lovely tresses hold him in embrace."⁵ The term usually used for a co-wife is sapatnī of which frequent mention is made. The most convincing, vivid and conclusive evidence of the existence of polygamy is, however, furnished by hymn 145 of the 10th book. The hymn itself is entitled "the Jealous Wife's Spell" (Upaniṣat sapatnībādhanam). Indrāṇī is the R̥ṣi of this hymn who wants to eclipse the influence of her rival over her husband Indra. The interesting hymn may be quoted below in its entirety:—

1. "From out the earth I dig this plant, an herb of most effectual power, Wherewith one quells the rival wife and gains the husband for oneself.
2. Auspicious with expanded leaves, sent by the gods, victorious plant, Blow thou the rival wife away, and make my husband only mine.
3. Stronger am I, O stronger one, yea, mightier than the mightier;
And she who is my rival wife is lower than the lowest dames.

¹ आस्त्रे सपत्नी अजरे अमृक्ते सबर्द्धे उरुगायस्य धेनू ॥ RV., III. 6, 4.

² स्वर्वेते सत्यश्रुणाय पूर्वावैश्वानराय नूतमाय यद्वीः ॥ ibid., I. 59, 4.

³ वि तन्वते धियो अम्मा अपांसि वस्त्रा पुत्राय मातरो वयन्ति । ibid., V. 47, 6.

⁴ उपप्रक्षे वृषणो मोदमाना दिवस्पथा बन्धो यन्त्यच्छ ॥ ibid.

⁵ तमध्रुवः केशिनीः सं हि रेभिर ऊर्ध्वस्तस्थुर्मध्रुवीः प्रायवे पुनः । ibid., I. 140, 8.

⁶ ibid., III. 1, 10 ; 6, 4 ; cf. I, 105, 8 ; X. 145, 1. 2. 5 ; 159, 5.

4. Her very name I utter not : she takes no pleasure in this man.
Far into distance most remote drive we the rival wife away.
5. I am the conqueror, and thou, also art victorious :
As victory attends us both we will subdue my fellow-wife.
6. I have gained thee for vanquisher, have grasped thee with a stronger spell,
As a cow hastens to her calf, so let thy spirit speed to me, hasten like water on its way."¹

In a subsequent hymn² the same Indrānī under a different name, that of Śacī Paulomī, annouces the effect of the spell referred to in the hymn quoted above. Her rival was squashed and she gained the favour of her lord, Indra. The entire hymn is given below :—

1. "Yon Sun hath mounted up, and this my happy fate hath mounted high.
I, knowing this, as conqueror have won my husband for mine own.
2. I am the banner and the head, a mighty arbitressam I.
I am victorious, and my lord shall be submissive to my will.
3. My sons are slayers of the foe, my daughter is a ruling queen :
I am victorious : o'er my lord my song of triumph is supreme.
4. Oblation, that which Indra gave and thus grew glorious and most high,—
This have I offered, O ye gods, and rid me of each rival wife.

¹ The translation has been quoted from Griffith's Hymns of the Rġveda, pp. 886-87.

² ४७., X. 159.

5. Destroyer of the rival wife, sole spouse, victorious, conqueror.

The others' glory have I seized as 'twere the wealth of weaker dames.

6. I have subdued as conqueror these rivals, these my fellow-wives,

That I may hold imperial sway over this hero and the folk."¹

Thus we find that just as it would appear from other instances quoted above that in many cases the relations between co-wives were happy, it would follow from the two above mentioned hymns that they were in certain cases strained as well. In the present case the situation had become so very acute that one of the co-wives had to take recourse to a spell and a ritual. It is also clear from this case that polygamy as a custom had become so common that among those of a revengeful spirit need was felt for supernatural agencies through which to damage the fortune of an ascendant co-wife. It is also probable that the two hymns cited above may have been later used as spells for the purpose by such co-wives as thought themselves eclipsed by the glories of those towards whom the common lord and husband appeared more considerate.

Kings, nobles and their priests were mostly polygamous as we have already said above. Cases of polygamy among them as also among the aboriginal non-Aryan chiefs Polygamy among kings, nobles and priests have been frequently instanced in the R̥gveda.² Indra, as shown above, has himself been several times alluded to as having a number of wives.

Kings, it appears, had a regular seraglio full of wives legally married as well as slave-girls loosely so treated. The evidence on the point is quite explicit as it says that Indra 'dwells among his wives in the manner of a king (rājeva).'³ The observation of Prof. Sarkar may be quoted here to elucidate the point. He says, "Apart from this possession of slave-girls, the princes had at least four principal wives recognised in regal ceremonial and rites, of whom the fourth, the 'pālāgalī,' seems to be a comparatively later development,—or to have been given a place in the ritual somewhat later—in the Brāhmaṇa age; the 'mahīṣī,' and the 'parivṛktī' occur from the Ṛgveda onwards; and though the 'vāvātā' first occurs in the AV., she is implied by the 'parivṛktī'; the 'pālāgalī,' wife of the king is an indication that it was a political marriage, and that daughters of other and higher court officials also were customarily taken into his harem from similar original motives; the first three designations are essentially relative, and pre-suppose a regular harem establishment, the members of which experienced constant rises and falls ('parivṛktī') in power at court ('mahīṣī') or in personal favour with the prince ('vāvātā'). Such rise and fall is well depicted in the chief wife's song of triumph, where she congratulates herself on the dawn of her fortunes, subjugation of rival wives and influence over the heroic lord with whom her name stands highest, and through whom she rules all the people,—on her son's rising to the rank of mighty warriors and daughters to that of princesses."¹

¹ Translation quoted from Griffith's Hymns of the R̥gveda, p. 898.

² I. 62, 11; 71, 1; 104, 8; 105, 8; 112, 19; 186, 7; VII. 18, 2; 26, 8; X. 41, 1; 101, 11.

³ राजेव हि जनिभिः ibid., VII. 18, 2; cf. II. 16, 8; X. 96, 9.

Purūravā seems to have had other wives² (kṣaṇibhiḥ) in his harem besides Urvaśī, who had joined him as a wife or mistress in consequence of a contract. From the Puranic literature also we know that this king had more wives than one. Kālidāsa, while following the tradition, makes Purūravā in his celebrated play Vikramorvaśī a husband of many wives. The word kṣaṇiḥ, referred to above, has also been used in connection with Indra whose passion would not be in any way satisfied with women (kṣaṇis).³ Mahīṣī, used several times in the *Ṛgveda*⁴ implies chiefship of a particular wife over other wives

¹ Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. His. of Ind., pp. 87-88.

² RV., X. 95, 9.

³ ibid., II. 16, 8.

⁴ ibid., V. 2, 2; 87, 8.

of a king. She is thus in effect the chief queen. The sage Kakṣivān had married two wives,¹ both being Rājanya princesses as already cited in the last chapter. So also Cyavāna, an ancient Ṛṣi, is said to have married several wives² in his old age. Kakṣivān himself was born of a slave-girl and so were many other Vedic personages like Auśija, Kavaṣa or Vatsa.³ These would be cases in point to show the prevalence of polygamy among priests and ṛṣis, for the slave-girls must have been only secondary wives, mistresses kept in concubinage, as we have not a single instance in the R̥gveda of an Ārya marrying a slave-girl when wedding an only wife. The custom was to marry an Āryā and bring along with her several slave-girls, who, when it suited the pleasure of their Aryan master, readily became his wives. Of this we shall treat below. We find that polygamy was a flourishing institution not only among the Aryans but that it had also made a headway in the social usages of the non-Aryans as well. Kuyava, a non-Aryan chief, has two wives, whom the poet denounces in a prayer and whom he desires to be drowned in the current of the Śiphā.⁴

We shall now consider the instances occurring in the R̥gveda of slave-girls taken in marriage as wives. We have no clear evidence, however, to show that they were bestowed on their husbands as a result of regular nuptial ceremonial as in case of the Aryan women. Thus it is not safe to say that they held in the Aryan household a status similar to that of the legally wedded Aryan wife. To the R̥gvedic Aryan sacraments and rituals were necessary precedents to marriage and similar other functions and it is doubtful whether in their absence the sexual connections between the slave-girls and their Aryan masters could have meant anything more than a loose concubinage. We have

¹ RV., I. 126, 8; I. 51, 18.

² ibid., I. 116, 10; cf. V. 74, 5; also cf. I. 117, 18, 118, 6, VII. 68, 6; 71, 5; X. 89, 4.

³ I. 18, 1., ibid.; 112, 11.

⁴ क्षीरेण स्नातः कुयवस्य योषे हते ते स्यातां प्रवणेशिकायाः ॥ ibid., I. 104, 8.

not a single instance where she appears along with her Aryan husband to perform yajñas or other religious rites. It appears that they were never ceremonially wedded to Aryans but when the latter married Aryan wives they also came in the train and while they were thus conferred over the husband presumably to serve his newly married wife all their life, they were styled as vadhūs.¹ This designation would confer upon them certain rights and privileges which may have been in most cases of the nature of those of a full-fledged wife. Now since they were termed as vadhūs they could be appropriated as wives. Their designation of the vadhū seems to have been meaningfully used in which the idea of their being turned into wives by the master who held them was implied. And when they had already been bestowed on the husband in the capacity of vadhūs they were already his semi-wives, and therefore whenever he wanted to appropriate them he could do so without any demerit attaching to his act. The dignity of the wife rose at its highest when she became a mother. With her motherhood and the number of children her prestige also grew. Thus when the slave-girl was taken by her Aryan master as his wife her status at that stage must have been lower than that of his legally wedded Aryan wife, but once she gave birth to a male child and thus justified her new position her status shot up and came in level with her Aryan co-wife's. If it were not so, it is difficult to comprehend the nature of the status, rights and privileges of the mothers of Kākṣivān, Auśija, Kavaśa or Vatsa, all of whom had been slave-girls. It must be noted in the meanwhile that these names are great in the R̥gveda and their bearers were the leaders of the society and models for men to emulate. They, being ṛṣis, were the keepers of the religious order,—the hymns were revealed to them, as though—and consequently nobody could have dared belittle their mothers or doubt their status as wives or mothers which must have been as high as that of an Aryan wife or mother.

¹ R̥V., I. 126, 8; V. 47, 6; VI. 27, 8; VIII. 19, 86; 68, 17.

At the very outset it may be observed that on both these points the evidence furnished by the Rġveda is meagre and mostly negative. And whatever references we have, are indirect. But these very allusions, howsoever meagre and indirect, warrant and establish the existence of both polyandry and incest, even though not as contemporaneous features, yet surely current incidents of a remote past. Polyandry is generally considered to be a non-Aryan custom, but from the Polyandry references that we have, which we shall quote presently below, a contrary view is established.

The evidence on the point is bound to be conflicting and inconclusive as the references to such cases are generally concealed in similes sometimes too vague to be understood. In the first place such references are about three in round numbers although they are mentioned twice and in certain cases even thrice in the same simile without any touch of originality. These references are made to three sets of gods, who in their physical sense are allied elements of nature. They are the Áśvins, Maruts and the Viśvedevas. These three groups of gods, specially the first two, signify natural phenomena of a very close type. Áśvins, the etherial healing physicians, the morning and evening twilight or stars, are twin gods

Áśvins attached to the sun and the moon. They are the groomsmen of Soma, the moon, and woo

Sūryā, the daughter of the Sun-god Savitā for him. Several times they have been alluded to as wooing Sūryā or driving home with her, or competing in the chariot race of the gods for her hand, perhaps on behalf of Soma, the moon. In a passage we read : "The youthful daughter of the sun, delighting in you, ascends there your chariot, heroes."¹ Another records, "Then she also came for friendship, made of noble birth, elected you as husbands, you to be her lords."² Here the allusion sounds rather emphatic while giving a maid two husbands at the same time. Nevertheless, it may be noted that the same bride is united sometimes with Soma and at others with the Ásvins and that the latter are inseparable twins and must always be referred to as one and the same individual. Sūryā, the daughter of Savitā married to Soma, is perhaps the light borrowed by the moon from the sun which she reflects during night. This light is transferred to the moon through the evening twilight, which is the Ásvins, the bestmen of the bridegroom. The real bridegroom is the moon, Soma, and verse 9 of hymn 85 of the tenth book conclusively corroborates what has been pointed out above. It runs as follows :—

¹ आ वां रथं युवतिस्तिष्ठन्न जुष्ट्वी नरा दुहिता सूर्यस्य । RV., I. 118, 5.

² आ वां पतित्वं सख्याय जग्मुषी योषा वृणीत जेन्या युवां पतीं ॥ ibid., I. 119, 5.

“Soma was he who wooed the maid : the groomesmen were both Ásvins, when The Sun-god Savitar bestowed his willing Sūryā on her lord.”¹

The verse has been quoted from due context. It occurs in the the wedding hymns of Sūryā where the Ásvins are entrusted with the work of winning the bride for the principal wooer and escorting her home. Again in the hymn X, 39 addressed to the Ásvins by the lady R̥ṣi Ghoṣā, a reference to the same theme is made in the following words : “Whom, Ásvins swift to hear, borne on your glowing path, ye with your consort make the foremost in the race.”² This also refers to the chariot race ‘consented to’ by the gods in which the Ásvins, Soma’s groomesmen, succeeded in driving Soma’s chariot fastest and consequently winning the hand of Sūryā for him.

Maruts, the foremost cavaliers of Indra’s army, are the object of allusion in the following line : “Upon their car the youths have set the maiden wedded to glory.”³ In the two preceding verses there is a reference to a sādhārāṇī wife enjoyed commonly by the Maruts⁴ and to Rodasī being devoted to

¹ RV., X. 85, 9.

² यमद्विना सुहवा रुद्रवर्तनी पुरोरथं कृणुयः पत्न्या सह ॥ ibid., 39, 11.

³ आस्थापयन्त युवति युवानः शुभे निमिषलां विदथेषु पञ्चाम । ibid., I. 167, 6.

⁴ परा शुभ्रा अयासो यव्या सधारण्येव मरुतो निमिषः ।

न रोदसी अप नुदन्त घोरा जुषन्त वृधं सख्याय देवाः ॥ ibid., 4.

her lords, the Maruts, like Sūryā to Áśvins.¹ Again in an address to the Maruts we hear, "Go, ye heroes, far away, ye bridegrooms with a lovely spouse."² Here the 'lovely spouse' is Rodasī, lightning wedded to the Maruts, who are the clouds. We know too well to be explained here the relation existing between the Maruts and Rodasī as between the clouds and lightning, and between Soma and Sūryā as between the moon and the borrowed light of the sun borne through the evening twilight, that is the Áśvins. Maruts in the singular number cannot be conceived by the imagination of a poet, who, when he looks up to the sky, finds a host of them, as it cannot be done in case of the morning and evening twilights, the Áśvins.

Viśvedevas, a host of gods are addressed in a hymn which appears to contain a reference to the custom in the line : "Two Visvedevas with one dame ride on with winged steeds and and others journey fourth like travellers on their way."³
 Although the anukramanī is silent on the point the above verse may have been meant for the Áśvins. We have a few more references⁴ to a woman marrying more husbands than one and to fathers-in-law but these in their bearing and purport are as obscure and veiled as the above.

According to Prof. Sarkar the three previous divine husbands of the maiden, who are respectively Soma, Agni and Gandharva, actually point to the custom of polyandry, and they may "be best understood as a relic of a gradually disused custom of polyandry, which was transformed into an allegory, most probably representing the life stages of a maiden till marriage."⁵ But this remark is hardly sound and cannot be

¹ जोषद्वदीमसुर्या सचष्ये विषितस्तुका रोदसी नृमणाः ।

आ सूर्येव विषतो रथं गात्वेषप्रतीका नमसो नेत्या ॥ RV., I. 167, 5.

² परा वीरास एतन मर्यासो भद्रजानयः । ibid., V. 61, 4.

³ विमिद्धा चरत एकया सह प्र प्रवासेव वसतः ॥ ibid., VIII. 29, 8.

⁴ ibid., VII. 88, 18 ; VIII. 17, 7 ; X. 85, 87, 88 ; cf. X. 95, 12.

⁵ ibid., X. 95, 12.

borne out by the evidence of the text by any stretch of imagination either directly or indirectly. As has been observed elsewhere the three supernatural agencies presiding over the different stages of the girl's physical development are allegorical from the very inception and they fail to mark a transition from one custom to another. Likewise two more points of the learned professor are open to grave doubt. That the matronymies¹ point to the same direction is too feeble to be made a point of discussion here. So also his suggestion that niyoga at some time or other was a general practice in the form of polyandry² cannot be seriously maintained.

There is only one more point that needs mention in this connection. It is the idea implied in the phrase devṛkāmā.³ It is important that while the wife is in coverture, nay, when she is yet in the process of being married, she is styled as devṛkāmā, desiring union with the younger brother of her husband. It could have been easily explained away had the occasion been one of funeral or had the phrase been used in reference to a widow, but its use respecting a bride during her nuptial is rather perplexing. It can be explained only with reference to a state of society in which all the brothers married a common wife, such reference pointing to a past period. The marriage hymn in which the phrase occurs is made up of formulæ strung together which naturally were ancient and had come down to that age being repeated from very remote times on the occasion of marriage.

Such veiled references, as noted above, however, cannot be taken literally. They seldom refer to similes drawn upon positive social habits of the people but they are natural and hazy pictures as they came to the physical eye of the Aryan poet accustomed to look upon the phenomena of nature with a reverential awe which he adjusted as similes to his metaphysical and very obtruse mystic conceptions. And the efforts to look for much material sense in them will not always yield the worth of labour.

¹ Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. His. of Ind., pp. 77-78.

² ibid., p. 78.

³ RV., X. 85, 44.

Yet even these indirect and indistinct references cannot be dismissed summarily as barren and unmeaning. They have to be telescoped with events fore and back to yield some sense. After all, these are not absolutely isolated incidents in our traditional history. There are others as well of which the instance of Draupadī marrying the five Pāṇḍavas stands out conspicuously. No amount of explanation as given on the point in the great epic can convince a student of ethnology of its being incidental except as a makeshift and an after-thought. Then that which is most intriguing in the incident is the proximity of the father of the family, Pāṇḍu, who lived in the Himalayas, with the Tibetans, who are noted to this day to practise polyandry and whose practice of the custom has been impliedly noted in the term Goyūthikam of Vātsyāyana. We are sure of one fact only, which is that the evidence in the R̥gveda is too scanty and feeble to establish conclusively that the custom was prevalent in the R̥gvedic age, but that it does refer to a stage however remote from the R̥gvedic age when the practice actually obtained but had become defunct in the period under our survey.

The most controversial point, that of the evidence on incestuous marriages, may now be considered. It is generally believed that the R̥gveda knows of no incestuous connections and that its society was altogether immune from the influence of incest. But a close analysis of the small evidence furnished by the Saṃhitā on the point coupled with a searching reference to the Puranic traditions and the Buddhistic Jātaka stories alluding to conditions both prior and posterior to the incidents of the R̥gveda leave no room for doubt regarding the prevalence of the custom at sometime or other in the Aryan society. By the evidence of the R̥gveda itself and by that of other sources which we shall notice below it becomes manifest that the usage was not only considered unworthy of an Aryan but also that it did obtain in the society at sometime or other. The custom may be studied under two distinct heads, namely sex-relations of an incestuous character between brothers and sisters and parental incest. We shall deal first with the former feature.

The most outstanding evidence on the point is the dialogue of Yama and Yamī contained in hymn 10 of the tenth book of the Rgveda. Yama and Yamī are twins, brother and sister, and, says Professor Roth, "the first human pair, the originators of the race. As the Hebrew conception closely connected the parents of mankind by making the woman formed from a portion of the body of the man, so by the Indian tradition they are placed in the relationship of twins. This thought is laid by the hymn in question in the mouth of Yamī herself, when she is made to say : 'Even in the womb the Creator made us for husband and wife.' " Prof. Müller, on the other hand, says (Lectures on the Science of Language, second series, p. 510): "There is a curious dialogue between her (Yamī) and her brother, where she (the night) implores her brother (the day) to make her his wife, and where he declines her offer, 'because,' as he says, 'they have called it a sin that a brother should marry his sister'." Again, p. 521, "There is not a single word in the Veda pointing to Yama and Yamī as the first couple of mortals, the Indian Adam and Eve.....If Yama had been the first created of men, surely the Vedic poets, in speaking of him, could not have passed this over in silence." See, however, the passage from the Atharva-veda, XVIII, 3, 13, to be quoted further on. [Reverence ye with an oblation Yama, the son of Vivasvat, the assembler of men, who was the first of men that died, and the first that departed to this (celestial) world].¹ The passage of the Atharva Veda cited in the above quotation would clearly show that the belief of the people during the Atharvavedic times was in favour of the twins being the first mortals, and the Rġveda itself in the hymn-dialogue of the twins hints at it.¹ Although side by side it seems to allude in a passage² of the dialogue to human society existing prior to Yama and Yamī.

¹ Quoted from Muir, O. S. Texts, V. p. 288.

We shall now analyse the hymn itself. The ṛsis as well as the deities of the hymn are the twins, Yama and Yamī, son and daughter of Vivasvān. In the opening Analysis of the dialogue verse the sister in passionate words entreats her brother to draw to her and to beget on her a son for their father, Vivasvān ; but the brother repulses her advances in gentle speech. He says :—

“Thy friend loves not the friendship which considers her who is near in kindred as a stranger.

Sons of the mighty Asura, the heroes, supporters of the heavens, see far around them.”³

This verse makes it explicitly clear that the merit of exogamous marriage had already impressed itself on the Aryans who had come to attach stigma to incestuous connections. The second line of the verse declares the sexual connection between the brother and sister as banned. This, however, also refers to its existence indirectly in times gone by. Yamī puts in another plea. She points out that the principles of law are meant for the mortals alone while it is an immortal seeking union⁴ with him, her brother, but the latter retorts her attempting to show historically that incest has never been an Aryan practice. “Shall we do now,” says he, “what we ne’er did aforetime? We who spake righteously now talk impurely?”⁵ Here is an endeavour on the part of the composer of the hymn to show that the custom never existed among the Aryans which, when considered along with other data, falls to

¹ एकस्य.....मर्त्यस्य—not the first born but first dead—RV., X. 10, 3.

² ibid., 4.

³ न ते सखा सख्यं वष्टघेतत्सलक्ष्मा यद्विषुक्पा भवाति ।
 महस्युत्रासो असुरस्य वीरा दिवो वर्तारि उर्विया परिख्यन् ॥ ibid., 2.

⁴ उवाचि चा ते अमृतास एतद् ..ibid., 3.

⁵ न यत्परा चक्रमा कद ननमता वदन्ती अनतं रपेम । ibid. 4

the ground. Yamī alludes to an earlier common notion of the people with regard to twins which sanctioned and praised their marriage and she even threatens Yama that in refusing her proposal he would be exposed to divine wrath and chastisement on account of his lack of respect for an ancient custom. She threatens him :—

“Even in the womb of Twashtar, vivifier, shaping all forms, creator, made us consorts.

None violates his holy ordinances : that we are his the heavens and earth acknowledge.”¹

Now since history does not bear Yama out, and since Yamī speaks of extant ordinances in favour of incest between brother and sister, Yama has no arguments but wrath in reply. He answers :—

“Who knows that earliest day where of thou speakest ?
Who hath beheld it ? Who can here declare it ?

Great is the law of Varuna and Mitra. What wanton !
wilt thou say to men to tempt them ?”²

In reply Yamī emphatically commits her love to Yama and declares it in the following words :—

“I, Yamī, am possessed by love of Yama, that I may rest on the same couch beside him.

I as a wife would yield me to my husband.

Like car-wheels let us speed to meet each other.”³

But Yama is conscious of the new ethical standard now obtaining in the society, and he warns her in the name of the watching sentinels of Varuna :—

“They stand not still, they never close their eye-lids, those sentinels of gods who wander round us.

¹ गर्भे नू नौ जनिता दम्पती कर्देवस्त्वष्टा सविता विश्वरूपः ।
नकिरस्य प्रमिनन्ति व्रतानि वेदनावस्य पृथिवी उत्तमौ ॥ RV., X. 10, 5.

² को अस्य वेद प्रथमस्याह्नः कई ददर्श क इह प्रवोचत ।
बृहन्मित्रस्य वरुणस्य घाम कदु ब्रव आहतौ दीक्ष्या नून ॥ ibid., 6.

³ यमस्य मा यम्यं काम आगन्वसमाने योनौ सहस्येय्याय ।
जायेव पत्ये तन्वं रिरिख्यां विचिद्वृहेव रथ्येव चक्रा ॥ ibid., 7.

Not me—go quickly, wanton, with another, and hasten like a chariot wheel to meet him.”¹

Then thinking him obsessed with the fear of breaking a recent principle of law and herself realizing the implications of transcending social laws—as she calls her proposal ‘an unbrotherly act’ (bibhryādajāmi)—Yamī in a fit of passion takes all the guilt that her brother would eventually incur upon herself and declares :—

“May Sūryā’s eye with days and nights endow him, and ever may this light spread out before him.

In heaven and earth the kindred pair commingle.
On Yamī be the unbrotherly act of Yama.”²

In the verse spoken by Yama in reply to Yamī the existence of the custom either as prevailing in the contemporary society or in an age gone by the reminiscences of which are yet fresh in the memory of the poet is clearly evidenced. Says Yama :—

“Sure there will come succeeding times when brothers and sisters will do acts unmeet for kinsfolk.

Not me, O fair one,—seek another husband, and make thine arm a pillow for thy consort.”³

The succeeding times have already passed by or are yet extant in the poet’s generation. The future curse is in fact a reaction against the custom which had now been declared as bad and unwanted. In the following reply Yamī implies and perhaps alludes to an old custom when the brother was considered a natural husband of the sister, although the outward sense of the verse enjoins upon a brother to find a husband for his

¹ न तिष्ठन्ति न निर्मिषन्त्येते देवानां स्पश इह ये चरन्ति ।

अन्येन मदाहनो याहि त्वयं तेन वि बृह रय्येव चक्रा ॥ RV., X. 8.

² रात्रीभिरस्मा अहभिर्दशस्येत्सूर्यस्य चक्षुर्मुहुश्मिमी यात् ।

दिवा पृथिव्या मिथुना सबन्धू यमीर्यमस्य बिभ्र्यादजामि ॥ ibid., 9.

³ आ धा ता गच्छानुत्तरा युगानि यत्र जामयः कृण्वन्नजामि ।

उप बर्हृहि वृषभाय बाहुमन्यमिच्छस्व सुभगे पतिं मत् ॥ ibid., 10.

sister and the latter to find a wife for the former. Yamī rebukes Yama :—

“Is he a brother when no lord is left her ? Is she a sister when Destruction cometh ?

Forced by my love these many words I utter. Come near, and hold me in thy close embraces.”¹

And Yama, referring to the custom as declared sinful by the people of his age, replies :—

“I will not fold mine arms about thy body : They call it sin when one comes near one’s sister.

Not me,—prepare thy pleasures with another : thy brother seeks not this from thee, O fair one.”²

Then the sister, repelled in her attempts to exercise her ancient right, becomes righteously indignant and directly calls her brother a coward with no trace of heart or spirit. She throws out an impassioned inducement to Yama :—

“Alas ! thou art indeed a weakling, Yama ; we find in thee no trace of heart or spirit.

As round the tree the woodbine clings, another will cling about thee girt as with a girdle.”³

The brother, adamant in his belief and action, feels the strength of his sister’s arguments and of her right on his person as a twin, but reminds her of the implications of the breach of a newly introduced custom, and himself dreading the wrath of the elders in agreeing with Yamī’s proposal, Yama in gentle compassionate words apprises her of the new standard of morals accepted by the society :—

¹ किं भ्रातासद्यवनाथं भवति किमु स्वसा यन्निर्द्धृतिर्निगच्छात् ।

काममृता बह्वे तद्रपाणि तन्वा मे तन्वं सं पिपृग्धि ॥ RV., X. 10, 11.

² न वा उ ते तन्वा तन्वं सं पपृच्यां पापमाहुर्यः स्वसारं निगच्छात् ।

अन्येन मत्प्रमूढः कल्पयस्व न ते भ्राता सुभगे वष्टयेतत् ॥ ibid., 12.

³ बतो बतासि यम नैव ते मनो हृदयं चाविदाम् ।

अन्या किल त्वां कश्येव युक्तं परिष्वजाते लिबुजेव वृक्षम् ॥ ibid., 18.

“Embrace another, Yamī ; let another, even as the wood-bine rings the tree, enfold thee.

Win thou his heart and let him win thy fancy, and he shall form with thee a blest alliance.”¹

This hymn will amply prove that incest had once received the sanction and approval of the society which now was fast becoming defunct. We have two more references alluding to the same custom. Hymn VI, 55 of the Rġveda almost endorses incest.² The hymn X, 162 constitutes a charm for the prevention of abortion the fifth verse of which seems to refer to incest. The R̥ṣi says, “What rests by thee in borrowed form of brother, lover, or of lord, and would destroy thy progeny,—even this will we exterminate.”³

But the most convincing proof of the existence of incest between brother and sister which comes in aid of the evidence of the Rġveda is that of the Puranic traditions. Support of Puranic traditions It must be remembered that the Puranic traditions in most cases illustrate the condition of society prevailing prior to the Rġvedic. We know, for instance, that Trasadasyu-Purukutsa⁴ and Yayāti⁵ figure in the Rġveda as heroes of past whose exploits are sung in the Saṃhitā, but the Purāṇas open with their genealogical table and history even several generations earlier. Yama himself figures in them as a descendant and not as the first progenitor of a family. No less than two dozen cases from the Puranic traditions (so ably discussed in details by Professor Sarkar) may be cited to

¹ अन्यमूषु त्वं यम्यन्त्य उ त्वां परिष्वजाते लिबुजेव वृक्षम् ।

तस्य वा त्वं मन इच्छा स वा तवाधा कणुष्व संविदं सुमद्राम् ॥ RV., X. 10, 14.

The translation is quoted from Griffith's Hymns of the Rġveda.

² पूषणं न्व जाश्वमुपस्तोषाम वाजिनम् । स्वसुर्यो जार उच्यते ॥ ibid., VI. 55, 4 ; स्वसुर्जारः ibid., 5.

³ यस्त्वा भ्राता पतिर्भूत्वा जारो भूत्वा निपद्यते । show the prevalence of incest both before and after the society envisaged by the R̥gveda. Save for a few exceptions all these allusions refer to instances in which brothers marry their own sisters, the father's daughters (pitṛ-kanyā).¹ And in these exceptions themselves brothers marry their half-sisters or first cousins. Veṇa's father Aṅga married his father's daughter (pitṛ-kanyā) Sunītā.² Vipracitti married his father Kaśyapa's daughter Simhikā. Yama and Yami's generation comes in the tenth step after Aṅga and Sunītā as they are the children of Vivasvān, the step-brother of Vipracitti and Simhikā. Manu, another son of Vivasvān, married Śraddhā, who is mentioned in the *Mahābhārata*³ as a daughter of Vivasvān. Nahuṣa-Aila, in like manner, married a pitṛ-kanyā named Virajā,⁴ who gave birth to Yayāti of the R̥gveda. Acchodā, a pitṛ-kanyā of Amāvasu Aila, chose the latter as her husband.⁵ Śukra-Uśanas, who later became the father-in-law of Yayāti, is stated to have married his 'father's daughter' named Gā.⁶ Devī, Devayāni's (daughter of Śukra-Uśanas) elder sister, married Varuṇa,⁷ who, being an immediate descendant of Śukra-Uśanas,⁸ must have been either a brother, a half-brother, or a first cousin. Bharata, among the Aṅgirasas, wedded his three sisters.⁹ Haimavatī-Dṛṣadvatī, daughter of Samhatāśva, married his two sons Kṛśāśva and Akṣayāśva. Māndhātṛ's son Purukutsa, the same who figures in the R̥gveda, married his pitṛ-kanyā Narmadā.¹⁰ Sagara's grandson Amśumat also is stated to have wedded his pitṛ-kanyā called Yaśodā.¹¹ Professor Sarkar suggests that

प्रजां यस्ते जिघांसति तमितो नाशयामसि ॥ ibid., X. 162, 5.

⁴ ibid., VIII. 19, 86.

⁵ ibid., X. 68, 1.

¹ Matsya Purāṇa, 4, 48-44; Vāyu P. II. 98, 12, etc.

² In all accounts of the Purāṇas and epics regarding Veṇa.

³ XII. 205, 9449; cf. ibid., 4507.

⁴ Vāyu P., II. 98, 12; Brahma P., 12, 1; Hārivaṃśa, 80, 1599; Matsya P., 15, 29; Liṅga P., I. 66, 60-1; Kūrma P., I. 22, 5.

⁵ Matsya P., 14, 1ff; Brahmāṇḍa P., III. 10, 54ff.

⁶ Matsya P., 15, 15; Brahmāṇḍa P., III. 1, 74-77.

⁷ Mahābhārata, I. 66, 2616.

⁸ ibid., XIII. 85, 4149.

⁹ ibid., III. 219, 14185-87.

¹⁰ Matsya P., 15, 25; Brahmāṇḍa P., III. 10, 98.

¹¹ Matsya P., 15, 18-19.

Daśaratha married Kauśalyā who must have been a first cousin (paternal uncle's daughter).¹ From the Daśaratha Jātaka it follows that Rāma and Sītā were brother and sister and, may be, Sītā's appellation 'janaka-duhitā' was equivalent to 'pitṛ-kanyā.'² At this stage, it would seem, perhaps the Ṛgvedic society revolted against the custom and asserted itself, and incest fell in abeyance for a time because for about twenty-seven generations after Rāma we do not read of sister-marriages in the Puranic traditions. Later, however, the usage proved too strong to die out and once again it reared its head up during the Mahābhārata age. Śuka, the son of Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana-Vyāsa, is stated to have married Pīvarī, who was his 'father's daughter.'³ King Drupada likewise married his sister.⁴ Satrājīt was wedded to ten sister-wives.⁵ Śrñjayī's son married two daughters of Śrñjaya.⁶ Again Sātvatā married Sātvatī, who must have been his kinswoman.⁷ His great-grandfather was wedded to an Aikṣvākī and their son again married an Aikṣvākī (Kauśalyā).⁸

We may here add a few instances from Buddhistic traditions to show that even after the epic age the tendency did not die out but it tenaciously persisted until a much later time, instances of which are not absolutely extinct even now as we shall see below. A jātaka story⁹ mentions Sītā, the wife of Rāma, to have been his sister, and, according to another, Kṛṣṇa's twin brother is stated to have married the daughter of his mother by her second

¹ Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. Hist. of India, p. 125.

² ibid., 126.

³ Harivaṃśa, 23, 1242-3.

⁴ Mahābhārata, 1, 167.

⁵ Vāyu, P. 96, 53.

⁶ ibid., 96, 2-6 ; Brahmāṇḍa P., III, 71, 3-6 ; Hariv., 88, 1999-2008 ; Brahma P., 15, 80-84 ; Matsya P., 44, 47-50.

⁷ Vāyu P., 95, 47 ; 96, 84.

⁸ Matsya P., 44, 45-47 ; Brahma P., 15, 27-30 ; Hariv., 87, 1994-2000.

⁹ Cowell : Jātakas, IV, 79-82.

husband.¹ Udayabhadrā of Kāśī married his half-sister Udayabhadrā.² Among the Śākya marriage with sisters had become a common feature and a recognised custom.³ Mahākosala, father of Pasenadi, king of Kosala, married his daughter Kosala-devī to king Bimbisāra, and princess Vajirā, daughter of Pasenadi, was wedded to Ajātasatru, her cousin.⁴ "Limitations on marriage imposed by Brahmanic usage are conspicuous by their absence in Buddhist literature and even sister marriage is referred to."⁵ Marriages between cousins were by no means unusual in the Buddhist period.⁶

Thus we find that incest between brother and sister has been a conspicuous feature of the Hindu marriage since the Ṛgvedic and still earlier times down to the Buddhist period. It is significant that it should have prevailed in both the solar and lunar races of the Kṣatriyas. It is thus evident that the case of Yama and Yamī occurring in the Ṛgveda is not an isolated example of it, and long before it, about ten generations earlier, its existence has been warranted in the same line of Kṣatriyas by the genealogical records of the Purāṇas. Even now the custom has not wholly disappeared and may be traced in the mātula-kanyā marriages of Maharashtra and south. There preference is given to marriages between cousins, i.e. maternal uncle's daughter. In face of these numerous data it will be futile to hold that incest is un-Vedic.⁷

¹ Jātakas, V. 226.

² ibid., IV. 87.

³ ibid., V. 219.

⁴ Bimala Charn Law : Women in Buddhist Literature, p. 12.

⁵ ibid., p. 1.

⁶ ibid., p. 2.

⁷ Here a very important point may be discussed which takes its rise from the numerous evidence cited above from the Puranic traditions. Dr. Pran Nath, the distinguished Professor of Ancient Middle East History and Antiquities of the Benares Hindu University contributed a series of eight articles in the Illustrated Weekly of India (in the year 1985, in its several issues from July to November) entitled the 'Aryans Before B.C. 1000.' Subsequently he published an allied paper entitled the 'Sumero-Egyptian Origin of the Ṛg Veda'

In very primitive times when the society was governed by a strong patriarchal system and when the number of women was small there were cases of incestuous connection between a father and his daughter and a son and his mother. A few of such cases have been warranted by the R̥gveda which seems to preserve these instances with a sense of approval. Or, at least, it is certain that the R̥gvedic poet could imagine with freedom such connections existing between a father and his daughter and between a son in Vol. I, Part 2, of the Journal of the Benares Hindu University. In these contributions the learned Professor presented a unique and bold front by asserting that the R̥gveda in its origin is a Sumero-Egyptian document. His conclusion has not been seriously challenged nor has it been accepted which shows that either it has been deliberately ignored or its strength has bewildered scholars. So far as the present writer knows only one attempt was made in the next issue of the Journal of the Benares Hindu University to combat the situation taken by Dr. Pran Nath, but it proved abortive as it did not even touch the subject seriously. The evidence of the Puranic traditions as marshalled into array in the foregoing pages and as ably detailed by Professor Sarkar in his work, Some Aspects of the Earliest Social History of India, pp. 116-185, supports Dr. Pran Nath's view to an amazing degree. We know that incestuous marriages between brothers and sisters were a peculiar trait of the Semitic races. They are even now so to a great extent. (This position is admitted on all hands). Such incestuous marriages are best illustrated by the social history of Egypt. There such marriages were a common feature. The ancient kings of Egypt always married their real sisters. Now, it is generally held by R̥gvedic scholars that the composition and compilation of the hymns of the R̥gveda were much posterior to the existence of the Egyptian royal family and to the erection of the pyramids. The Puranic traditions describe conditions and illustrate cases of a society which flourished at a period much anterior to the composition of the R̥gveda. It is therefore easy to show, as has been done above, that the parallel cases of the R̥gveda are incidents of generations figuring several steps later in the Puranic genealogical table. Yama of the R̥gveda comes about ten generations later in the Puranic list and so do Yayāti and Trasadasyu-Purukutsa who represent a later period in the Purāṇas. The instances of incestuous marriages preserved in the Puranic accounts are in most cases of a time much prior to the R̥gveda. And these instances are not a few but numerous, prolific. In the R̥gveda itself the custom of marriage between brother and sister is so defunct that we get only three indirect references to it in its whole range. These themselves preserve only instances of a bygone age, and his mother. The former type is evidenced in the love and union of Prajāpati and his daughter¹ and the latter is evidenced in the example of Pūṣan wooing (didhiṣu) his own mother.² The former case is substantiated by a few similar instances in the Purāṇas as well which do not fall within the province of our discussion. The case of incestuous connection between mother and son may also be cited in one existing (at least so conceived by the poet) between Uṣā, the dawn, and Sūrya, the sun. The dawn has been described as the mother generating Sūrya³ and bearing him as her illustrious child.⁴ She is also while those of the Purāṇas are numerous and come from still earlier times. It is probable that the two sets of evidence belong to the same period of time or that the Ṛgvedic data are slightly later. Thus it may be shown without fear of contradiction that both the Ṛgveda and the earlier accounts of the Purāṇas refer to conditions in an ancient society of the Aryans in which sister-marriages were common and praiseworthy. Now, which was this society of the Aryans in which sister marriages were considered normal? It is here that the conclusion of Dr. Pran Nath comes to our aid and solves the riddle. Sister-marriages are held as a distinguishing trait among the social habits of the semitic Egyptians. It also prevailed among the early Hebrews and Arabs. If we accept Dr. Nath's conclusion that the Aryans were agnates to the Egyptians on whom the latter's social legacy devolved, we shall have no difficulty in explaining the apparently un-Vedic and non-Aryan custom of sister-marriage references to which are preserved in the Ṛgveda and instances of which are multiplied and detailed in the traditional accounts of the Purāṇas.

¹ RV., X. 61, 5-7. It is interesting to note the observation of Professor Max Müller regarding this myth of Prajāpati and his daughter. He says: "When Kumārila is hard pressed by his opponents about the immoralities of his gods, he answers with all the freedom of a comparative mythologist: 'It is fabled that Prajāpati, the Lord of Creation, did violence to his daughter. But what does it mean? Prajāpati, the Lord of Creation, is a name of the Sun, and he is called so, because he protects all creatures. His daughter Ushas is the dawn. And when it is said that he was in love with her, this only means that, at sunrise, the sun runs after the dawn, the dawn being at the same time called the daughter of the Sun, because she rises when he approaches'."—History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 529-30.

² मातुर्दिषिषु RV., VI. 55, 5.

³ ibid., VII. 78, 3.

⁴ ibid., I. 118, 1. 2.

referred to as the wife of Sūrya¹ shining with the light of her lover,² and being pursued by him as a young man follows a maiden.³ She is constantly mentioned as the daughter of the heaven (duhitardivah)⁴ but at one place she is spoken of even as his beloved (priyā).⁵ We have, however, no counterparts in the Puranic traditions of incest between a mother and her son.

¹ RV., VII. 75, 5 ; IV. 5, 18.

² ibid., I. 92, 11.

³ ibid., I. 115, 2 ; cf. I. 123, 10.

⁴ ibid., I. 80, 22, etc., vide ante.

⁵ ibid., I. 48. 1.

CHAPTER V

THE WIFE AND MOTHER

The free, bold maiden, approached and adored by a crowd of young suitors, could not but be the cause of a little pride in her conduct. Pride to a considerable extent results in dignity and the R̥gvedic wife who was first flattered with attentions and repeated visits by young men of promise and eminence was bound to be dignified and gracious when later wedded to an Ārya under the nuptial ceremonies to which Agni, one of the greatest gods of the Indo-Aryan pantheon, was the chief witness. Thus the dignity of the wife which was to survive in the mother, the progenitor of the Ārya and a member of unique importance in the Aryan family, was recognised in the R̥gvedic society. She was not only an auxiliary in the management of the household but the very centre of the domestic world and empress¹ (samrājñī) in her home. The husband identified her with his very home, his abiding hearth. "A wife, O Maghavan," says the great seer Viśvāmitra, "is home and dwelling."² She is auspicious³ (kalyāṇī), the most auspicious (śivatamā),⁴ who brings blessings and prosperity to the bipeds and quadrupeds⁵ of her husband's household. "Not fierce of eye," the priest sends the bride to her new home after blessing her, "no slayer of thy husband, bring weal to cattle, radiant, gentle-hearted; loving the gods, delightful, bearing heroes, bring blessing to our quadrupeds and bipeds."⁶

¹ R̥V., X. 85, 46.

² जायेदस्तं मघवन्सेदु योनिस्तदित्वा युक्ता हरयो बहन्तु । ibid., III. 58, 4.

³ ibid., 6.

⁴ ibid., X. 85, 37.

⁵ ibid., 48. 44.

⁶ ibid., 44.

The wife was the perfect companion of her husband and it was one prayer of the Aryan to be wedded to an auspicious wife, who should be the sharer of his pleasures and who should twine her loving arms about him, and welcome all his embraces.¹ Indra after he has drunk the Soma juice need hardly be reminded to 'turn himself homeward (astam) for his joy lay in his home, his gracious and auspicious wife' (kalyāṇīrjāyā).² After the liquor has had its full effect on the senses of Indra he becomes the charge of his dear loving wife. The poet regards him with apparent envy when he sends him to Indrāṇī : "Therewith in rapture of the juice draw near (upayāhi) to thy beloved spouse" (prīyāṁ jāyām).

The Aryan combined in his person the traits of both a materialist and spiritualist. Later Hindu society compartmentalized life, as it were, and divided it into four periods most suited to the changing conditions of aging life. It was realized very early that man was not merely a being but a becoming, a fast changing complex and so the individual was provided with the activities suitable for his growing needs. This fourfold division, technically called the four āśramas in the life of a dvija, twice-born, which starved no sphere of human development and which developed later into an important institution, had its obscure beginnings in the Rgveda itself. Because we find that alongside the spiritual quest the Aryan sought his temporal beatitude as well. Domestic happiness and conjugal affection are the constant topics of allusion in the Rgveda and the seers of the Samhitā are not fatigued while seeking repeatedly the bond that binds them to a happy home governed by a contented wife. "True to the kindred points of heaven and home," the Aryan blended together his stern and austere duties to the gods and affectionate conjugal habits of the earthly

¹ तां पूषञ्छिवतमामेरयस्व यस्यां बीजं मनुष्या वपन्ति ।

या न ऊरु उशती विश्रयाते यस्यामुशन्तः प्रहराम शेषम् ॥ RV., X. 85, 97.

² अयाः सोमस्तमिन्द्र प्र याहि कल्याणीर्जाया सुरणं गृहे ते । ibid., III. 58, 6.

home in a proportion that generated the habits of a most balanced life. Such a life is reflected in a verse of incalculable social value. "Close to her husband," sings the poet, "clings the wife: And in embraces inter-twined, both give and take the bliss of love."¹ Such a state of relationship also, by the way, reflects upon the character of the wife. She could make her home a paradise only when she herself was guiltless and bestowed her affection unreservedly on her husband while the latter overwhelmed her with his meaning and undivided caresses. The love of a married couple is undoubtedly an inevitable assumption but naturally a 'blameless dame'² (anavadyā nārī) was very dear to her husband and she could easily rely on the absolute fidelity of her spouse. Nor was love an affair of the husband alone. The strength and vigour of the wife lay in the power of her love and the man was considered singularly fortunate who, while leading home a vigorous wife, found her loving too.³ Such a wife was bound to be cheered as she came close.⁴ How much miserable the domestic life of a couple becomes when one of them cannot completely return the warm embraces of the other! Onesided love is a great danger to the established ethical habits of the society. The R̥gvedic priest was conscious of such a peril and it was his ardent desire to see his home deeply rooted in the love of a wedded couple. He implored his gods to keep disaffection at arm's length and prayed to them: "So may the universal gods, so may the waters join our hearts, May Mātariśvan, Dhātār, and Deśtrī together bind us close."⁵ The cementing of the married hearts was considered the foundation of all worldly happiness arising from the domestic life and the sight of children. This idea is brought home very graphiibid., I. 181, 8.

¹ अर्थमिदं च अर्थिन आ जाया युवते पतिम् । R̥V., I. 105, 2.

² पुरः सदः शर्मसदो न वीरा अनवद्या पतिजुष्टेव नारी ॥ ibid., 78, 8.

³ वधूरियं पतिमिच्छन्त्येति यई बहाते महिषीमिधिराम् । ibid., V. 87, 8. also cf.

⁴ ibid., V. 87, 8.

⁵ ibid., X. 85, 47.

cally in the following blessing of the priest on the occasion of marriage :—

“Happy be thou and prosper with thy children here : be vigilant to rule thy household, in this home.

Closely unite thy body with this man, thy lord. So shall ye, full of years, address your company.”¹

The very ideal character of an Aryan wife has been brought out in verse 6 of hymn 86 of the tenth book uttered by Indrāṇī :—

“No dame with ampler charms than I, or greater wealth of love’s delights.

None with more ardour offers all her beauty to her lord’s embrace. Supreme is Indra over all.”² Nowhere can be found such an ideal in practice as one embodied in the lines quoted above. Here is a total negation of self on the part of a woman for the man she adores. She bares her heart and lays all its hidden treasures without any reserve at the feet of her husband. Here was a complete surrender which was thoroughly returned and likewise responded to by the husband. And in the absence of such a return there were undoubtedly chances of a foreigner making his unchaste advances on the unfortunate woman and thus vitiating the pleasures of a married home. Such a notion is hinted at in the line, ‘This noxious creature looks on me as one bereft of a hero’s love.’³ Herein Indrāṇī refers to the liberty Vṛṣākapi has had the audacity to take with her person as one would take with a woman who has not a hero, i.e. a loving husband, for her protector. She further asserts that besides her husband she has her other protectors, for example her sons. Says she : “Yet

¹ इह प्रियं प्रजया ते समृध्यतामस्मिन्गृहे गार्हपत्याय जागृहि ।

एना पत्या तन्वं सं सृजस्वाधाजिह्वी विदथमा वदाथः ॥ RV., X, 85, 27.

² न मत्स्त्री सुभसत्तरा न सुयाशुतरा भुवत् ।

न मत्प्रतिच्यवीयसी न सक्थ्युद्यमीयसी विश्वस्मादिन्द्र उत्तरः ॥ ibid., X, 86, 6.

³ अवीरामिव मामयं शराहरमि मन्यते । ibid., 9.

heroes for my sons have I, the Marut's friend and Indra's queen."¹ Similes—for instance, 'Loving the loving one, as wives their husband'²—are drawn commonly from sweet domestic relationship, between the husband and his wife. In a passage we read the prayer: "May we once firmly cling to the favours even as husbands to their wives."³ Another has, "Dawn, like a loving matron for her husband, smiling and well attired unmasks her beauty."

The wife had to perform duties which were both of celestial as well as terrestrial nature. Her religious duties were even more important than the secular ones. Her principal function in the Aryan household was to keep the domestic fire kindled at all hours. The various sacrifices were the chief visible forms of Aryan worship and they dominated the religious ceremonies of the society. For the purpose of sacrifices fire was essential; besides, Agni was one of the most important gods of the times. Agni was the priest⁴ (purohitam, ṛtvijam) of the gods. It was through him that the Ārya had communication with other gods and so fire was to be kept constantly kindled. And this duty of ever keeping the fire kindled in the family hearth was made the concern of the wife. It was the same nuptial fire which had witnessed her union with a new soul when this latter took her round it and which act gave to the ceremony of wedding its name—pariṇaya. Macdonell observes: "The taking of her hand placed the bride in the power of her husband. The stone on which she stepped was to give her firmness. The seven steps which she took with her husband and the sacrificial food which she shared with him were to inaugurate friendship and community. Future abundance and male off-

¹ उताहमस्मि वीरिणीन्द्रपत्नी मरुतसखा विश्वस्मादिन्द्र उत्तरः ॥ RV., X. 86, 9.

² ibid., I. 71, 5.

³ सकृत्सु ते सुमतिभिः शतक्रतो सं पत्नीभिर्न वृषणो नसीमहि ॥ ibid., II. 16, 8.

⁴ अग्निमीळे पुरोहितं यज्ञस्य देवमृत्विजम् ।

होतारं रत्नधातमम् ॥ ibid., I, 1, 1.

spring were prognosticated when she had been conducted to her husband's house, by seating her on the hide of a red bull and placing upon her lap, the son of a woman who had only borne living male children. The god most closely connected with the rite was Agni for the husband led his bride three times round the nuptial fire and the newly kindled domestic fire was to accompany the couple throughout life.

Religious Offerings are made to it and Vedic formulas pronounced. After sunset the husband leads out his bride and as he points to the pole and the star Arundhati they exhort each other to be constant and undivided for ever."¹ Agni was one of her earlier symbolical husbands and he later presided over the rite of wedding when the bride took for her a mortal husband. Agni thus being the witness of the nuptial ceremony became almost symbolical of her coverture and auspiciousness, sambhāgya, and so the keeping up of the domestic fire meant the lifelong coverture of the wife. Such being the case, and further for the repeated use of fire in sacrificial worship the wife who was in charge of all domestic concerns, she had for her principal duty the keeping alive of Agni at all hours of the day and night. The wife, worshipping the various gods, has been frequently referred to in company of her husband: "The united pair, worshipful and righteous, waxing old in their devotion seek Agni together."² The Soma juice which gave colour to the eyes of Indra and strength to his arms had to be washed and pressed out by both the husband and wife acting with one mind, one accord³ (yadampatī samanasā). The dutiful and sacred life of the couple is brought out in a most vigorous verse which reads as follows :—

"Serving the immortal one with gifts of sacrificial meal and wealth,

¹ History of Sanskrit Literature, p. 254.

² बृहद्वयो बृहते तुभ्यमग्ने विद्याजुरो मिथुनासः सचन्त । RV., V. 48, 15.

³ या दम्पती समनसा युनुत आ च धावतः ।

देवासो नित्ययाशिरा ॥ ibid., VIII. 81, 5.

They satisfy the claims of love and pay due honour to the gods.”¹

Gods are constantly kept in mind and whatever the nature of engagements of the couple they cannot afford to lose sight of them. The verse admirably sums up the two complementary parts of life, the worldly and the godly. Immediately after the wedding, especially in cases of love-marriages, men and women forget all else in the drowning passion of their love. Married pleasures are apt to engross the couple and to render them forgetful of their duties to the society and to the gods. The R̥gvedic seer therefore, conceding to them the enjoyment of the material luxuries and worldly pleasures, reminds them of their real duties which were extra-terrestrial. Claims of love and the aids to them are surely the needs of a householder but over and above these are his duties which draw him away from the essentially earthly engagements and join him to the more lasting ends of religion. The verse embodies a sense of middle course between the two extremes of lustful appetite and austere renunciation. The harmony of both the material and spiritual pursuits is well kept in view. It is significant that most of the sages of the R̥gvedic times lived up to the ideal preserved in this line. We know that most of the seers of the Samhitā were married householders enjoying the luxury of many wives, children, slaves and cattle. They were in most cases priests attached to royal courts and nobles. And yet their greatness in the field of religion and philosophy is a proved fact. It is generally held that the germs of all later philosophy and metaphysics of the Hindus may be traced in the R̥k Samhitā. The conceivers and utterers of such truths—the contents of the hymns being held to have been revealed to them (mantradraṣṭā ṛṣayaḥ; sāksātkṛtadharmāṇaḥ ṛṣayaḥ)—must need be men of great spiritual attainments. It may with great emphasis be said in reference to the life they led that 'they satisfy the claims of love and pay due honour to the gods.'¹

¹ नीतिहोत्रा कृतद्वसु दशस्यन्तामृतायकम् ।

समूधो रोमशं हतो देवेषु कृणुतो दुवः ॥ R̥V., VIII. 81, 9.

The wife attended all the sacrifices in the Aryan family.² Her presence at all sacrifices instituted by her husband was essential. She appeared as the sacrificer along with her husband just as the gods invoked came in pairs to accept the offered oblations. The religious functions and sacrifices could not be complete unless they were performed by the wife and her husband together. This would show that the religious ceremonies which in later times were banned against the Hindu wife could be performed by her in the R̥gvedic times in her own right. In conjunction with her husband she is the subject of common allusion in the Samhitā on the occasion of the religious functions. The ideal of Kālidāsa regarding marriage as embodied in his phrase *sahadharmacaraṇāya*³—wedding for the purpose of performance of the social and religious duties in company (jointly by both the husband and wife)—was literally realized in the R̥gvedic society. Instances of the wife appearing at such an important occasion as the sacrifice may be multiplied innumerable from the R̥k Samhitā. "Nigh they approach," says the R̥ṣi, "one minded with their spouses, kneeling to him adorable paid worship."⁴ Āṅgiras Kutsa praises Agni for having bestowed his blessing upon the pair, 'who with uplifted ladle serve him, husband and wife.'⁵ In a third passage an analogy is drawn between women attending on their lord and the pair together performing the sacrifice.⁶ We read elsewhere, "They gain sufficient food ; they come united to the sacred grass and never do they fail in strength. Never do they deny or seek to hide the favour of the gods. They win high

¹ RV., VIII. 91, 9.

² संहितं स्म पुरा नारी समनं दाव गच्छति । ibid., X. 86, 10.

³ Abh. Śākh., p. 165 ; सहधर्मचारिणी ibid., p. 260 ; Ku., viii. 29 ; सहधर्मचारिणम् ibid., 51 ; cf. क्रियाणां खलु धर्म्याणां सपत्न्योर्मूलकारणम् ॥ ibid., vi. 18.

⁴ अग्निद्वयोरदधा उक्थ्यं वचो यतस्तुचा मिथुना या सपर्यतः । RV., I. 88, 8.

⁵ उभे भद्रे जोषयेते न मेने गावो न वाश्वा उप तस्थुरेवैः । ibid., 95, 6.

⁶ ibid., VIII. 81, 5.

glory for themselves.”¹ Thus the importance of the woman is evidenced by the fact that her appearance at the most important occasion of the religious life of the Aryan, i.e. during sacrifices, was made imperative. Such a member of the family must need enjoy considerable influence and status in the society.

We shall now pass on to her worldly and domestic duties. Bearing of male children was the main purpose of the R̥gvedic marriage. The end was both religious as well as Temporal temporal. The wife was expected to bear heroes for the propagation of her husband's race as also perhaps for fighting his enemies. Not so much for the purposes of inheritance as for the latter reason sons were needed. This is why the Ārya repeatedly prayed for a pretty large number of male children. The usual number prayed for was ten.² Already a number of references has been quoted from the R̥gveda to show an ardent desire on the part of the husband for having male children. The wife in this way was even a political necessity and her influence must have grown rapidly in proportion to the number of her sons. The idea of the woman's strength lying in her sons holds good in the Hindu community even now, although it seems to have come in vogue in the Aryan society very much earlier, thanks to the political no less than to religious reasons. In course of time when the former was no more a potent reason due to the settled condition of the country the latter alone survived and even gained ground. It was this religious consideration which influenced the ideas of the later Aryan so much so that his progeny inherited the principle as an instinct. The propagation of the race and more particularly the performance of the obsequial rites are the chief notions that govern the desire of the modern Hindu husband, as it was the case with one of the mediaeval times, in begetting a son on a legally married wife, apart from the considerations of inheritance and the instinctive affection for a child of the flesh.

¹ RV., VIII. 81, 6-7.

² दशास्यं पुत्रानावेहि पतिमेकादशं कृषि || ibid., X. 85, 45, etc.

In the despatch of her domestic duties the wife ran to and fro. She was a busy matron controlling her household and looking after her charge. She was an 'honourable dame, a true active worker.'¹ First of all she was expected to attend on her lord² who was the gr̥hapati just as she was the gr̥hapatnī. The poet observes, "For many thousand holy works the sisters wait on the haughty lord like wives and matrons."³ In her capacity as the gr̥hapatnī she had the charge of the entire household, of the members of the family, the domestics and slaves and of the cattle and other animals. As soon as she became a wife she was exhorted to take charge of the quadrupeds and the bipeds of the new family and to bear a benign temper towards them.⁴ She was expected to look after the needs and requirements of her parents-in-law, brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law.⁵ Several times in the R̥gveda Uṣā has been compared to a matron who makes life astir, carefully tending everything. "Rousing all life she stirs all creatures that have feet, and makes the birds of air fly up."⁶ "She cometh like a matron waking sleepers."⁷ Thus the wife, the mistress of the house, left her bed before all others and in the manner of Uṣā, who unlocked the bolts of the great eastern gate of the sky⁸ to let in the light of the sun after the expiry of the night, she opened the door of her house, and sent out the members of her family, the domestic slaves and the cattle to their respective duties of the day. She was like a mother unto all life—human beings or animals—and so cared affectionately for it.⁹ From

¹ शुचिभ्राजा उषसो नवेदा यशस्वतीरपस्युवो न सत्या ॥ R̥V., I. 79, 1.

² जाया विशते पतिम् ॥ ibid., X. 85, 29.

³ पुरु सहस्रा जनयो न पत्नीर्दुवस्यन्ति स्वसारो अह्वयाणम् ॥ ibid., I. 62, 10.

⁴ शं नो भव द्विपदे शं चतुष्पदे ॥ ibid., X. 85, 48, 44.

⁵ ibid., 46.

⁶ आ वा योषेव सूनुर्युषा याति प्रभुञ्जती ।

जरयन्ती वृजनं एद्वदीयत उत्पातयति पक्षिणः ॥ ibid., I. 48, 5.

⁷ अन्नसन्न ससतो बोधयन्ती शश्वत्तमागात्पुनरेयुषीणाम् ॥ ibid., I. 124, 4.

⁸ उषो यदद्य भानुना वि द्वारावृणवो दिवः । ibid., 48, 15.

⁹ दुरोकशोचिः क्रतुर्न नित्यो जायेव योनावरं विश्वस्मै । ibid., I. 66, 8.

very ancient times, the Rgveda informs us, the matron had been entrusted with the duty of responding to invitations and attending the social and religious functions and festivities.¹ Agni within the house has been compared with a faithful wife beautifying everything.²

The conjugal relationship and the domestic happiness which it engendered naturally was a matter of pride to the Rgvedic poet to which he makes a reference whenever an occasion permits. A few comparisons may be cited. "I invoke him," says the Ṛṣi, "with the tenderness which a husband has for his wife."³ Another passage has, "He invokes you and prays to you with the faith which a wife has in her husband."⁴ A third invokes Indra to "accept our offerings, listen to our prayers; be to us what a husband is to his young wife."⁵ Again the god is implored, "Love our prayer as the husband loves his wife."⁶ The same idea is brought out in the line: "Love our voices, as the husband loves the voice of a well-beloved wife"⁷ and in "Thou lovest us, as a wife loves her husband."⁸ The mutual feeling of love between the husband and his wife was so deep that it permeated all the actions of the Ṛṣi. His prayers reflect again and again the pleasures of his wedlock and reveal his affection for his wife. He repeatedly returns to the fidelity, charms and the love of his wife and draws his similes and metaphors from the sweet incidents of his happy home. The busy movements of his wife he seems to see and her ringing voice to hear while crooning his prayers. Her association seems to fill the ideas of the poet and her voice echoes and re-echoes in

¹ सं ह्योत्रं स्म पुरा नारी समनं वाव गच्छति ॥ RV., X. 86, 10.

² Wilson : Rig-Veda, Vol. I. p. 179, v. 8.

³ ibid., III. p. 160, v. 5.

⁴ ibid., p. 366, v. 4.

⁵ ibid., p. 82, v. 5.

⁶ ibid., p. 110, v. 8.

⁷ ibid., p. 184, v. 16.

⁸ ibid., Vol. V. p. 386, v. 4.

his tremulous notes. The poet seems as though he cannot grow out of his house and its governing angel, his wife. The hymns of the R̥gveda abound in tender references to the wife and everywhere there bursts forth a passionate sympathy for her and a devout wish for her well-being.

The wife with her love, fidelity and submission cast a very winning influence. Her silent suffering occasionally won back to her her distracted husband and to the latter his lost sense. Book ten of the R̥gveda preserves a hymn which records the fate of a dice-blind habitual gambler, who kept present in the dicing hall at all hours like its prop, the middle pillar. The story is interesting and may be narrated here. The gambler was always transported with joy 'as the dice turned upon the table.'¹ The sight of the dice had the same effect upon him as the wine has over the drinker. He had staked all his property and finally his wife and now he bewailed the loss of her. His very loving and loyal wife suffered inwardly without a murmur or complaint all the indignities that he showered over her as a result of his extreme addiction to gambling. She never got vexed or angry but to him and his friends she was always gracious.² The gambler feels full the remorse after he has staked and lost her. "For the dies' sake" says he, "whose single point is final mine own devoted wife I alienated."³ The jingling sound of the dice had so overpowered his sense of reason that even before his final folly his guilt had made his wife bitter and now when she had been thus staked and lost as chattel his mother-in-law despised⁴ him and 'the wretched man found none to give him comfort.'⁵ "As a costly horse grown old and feeble," repents he, "I find not any profit of the gamester."⁶ His woe grows beyond

¹ प्रावेपा मा वृहती मादयन्ति प्रवातेजा इरिणे वर्वृतानाः । RV., X. 84, 1.

² न मा मिमेथ न जिहीळ एषा शिवा सखिभ्य उत मद्दृषमासीत् । ibid., 2.

³ अक्षस्याहमेकपरस्य हेतोरनुव्रतामप जायामरोषम् ॥ ibid.

⁴ द्वेष्टि इवश्रूरप जाया रुणद्धि ibid., 8.

⁵ न बाधितो विन्दते मर्डितारम् । ibid.

⁶ अश्वस्येव जरतो वस्यस्य नाहं विन्दामि कितवस्य भोगम् ॥ ibid.

description when he finds others caressing and taking liberty with his wife, when already he has been dispossessed of his riches,¹ and when he sees his nearest kinsmen like his father, mother and brother surrounding and renouncing him to his creditor with the words, 'Bind him and take him with you.'² Not once but many a time he resolves not to gamble but he is in a genuine plight when he finds himself absolutely forlorn by his friends, the gamesters;³ and 'when the brown dice, thrown on the board, have rattled.'⁴ he cannot restrain himself and runs to the gambling table 'like a fond girl to her rendezvous.'⁵ In course of four verses he describes the lure and attraction that the dice had to his society and the magical power and hold which it had over him in a language full of vigour and in a style peculiarly the author's:—

"The gamester seeks the gambling-house, and wonders, his body all afire, Shall I be lucky?

Still do the dice extend his eager longing, staking his gains against his adversary.⁶

"Dice, verily, armed with goods and driving hooks, deceiving and tormenting, causing grievous woe.

They give frail gifts and then destroy the man who wins, thickly anointed with the player's fairest good.⁷

"Merrily sports their troop, the three-and-fifty, like Savitar the god whose ways are faithful.

They bend not even to the mighty's anger: the king himself pays homage and revores them.⁸

¹ अन्ये जायां परि मृशन्त्यस्य यस्यागूषद्वेदने वाज्यक्षः । RV., X. 94, 4.

² पिता माता भ्रातर एवमाहुर्न जानीमो नयता बद्धमेतम् ॥ ibid.

³ यदादीध्ये न दविषाण्येभिः परायद्भ्योऽव हीय सखिभ्यः । ibid., 5.

⁴ न्युप्ताश्च बभ्रवो वाचमक्रतु एमीदृषां निष्कृतं ibid.

⁵ जारिणीव ibid.

⁶ सभामेति कितवः पूच्छमानो जेष्यामीति तन्वाशूषुजानः ।

अक्षासो अस्य वि तिरन्ति कामं प्रातिदीन्वे दधत आ कृतानि ॥ ibid., 6.

⁷ अक्षास इदं वशिनो नितोदिनो निकृत्वानस्तपनास्तपयिष्णवः ।

कुमारदेष्णा जयतः पुनर्हणो मध्वा सम्पूतताः कितवस्य बर्हणाः ॥ ibid., 7.

⁸ त्रिपञ्चाशः क्रीडति त्रात एषां देव इव सविता सत्यधर्मा ।

उग्रस्य चिन्मन्यवे ना नमन्ते राजा चिदेभ्यो नम इत्कुणोति ॥ ibid., 8.

“Downward they roll, and they spring quickly upward, and, handless, force the man with hands to serve them.
Cast on the board, like lumps of magic charcoal, though cold themselves they burn the heart to ashes.”¹

Again and again he resolves to refrain from the evil and repeatedly the sight of the seductive dice humbles him and breaks his promise. He plays with a vengeance. He plays and loses and plays again, and his loss exasperates him. He has lost all. He borrows and loses again. One dark night he completes his ruin. ‘Mad with despair, distracted with terror, pursued by a creditor’ he repairs to his house but its doors are closed to him. He knocks but they do not open, and he stretches himself on bare earth. The forlorn and wretched state of his wife makes him reflect. He thinks ‘that other wives are happy, that other homes are fortunate!’ The night brings in remorse but the dawn ushers in hope and as the day breaks he is seen again as ever bending over the infernal dice. He ‘yokes the brown steeds again,’² as it were.

But at last absolution comes and the silent sufferings of his wife cast him out of the dull stupor he has been in when the priest opens his arms to take him in with his sane and sombre counsel :—

“Play not with dice : no, cultivate thy corn-land. Enjoy the gain, and deem that wealth sufficient.

There are thy cattle, there thy wife, O gambler. So this good Savitar himself hath told me.”³

The duties of the wife were of course tender, though responsible, mainly pertaining to the family and the hearth. The duties of the husband and wife were different and distinct.

¹ नीचा वर्तन्त उपरि स्फुरन्त्यहस्तासो हस्तवन्तं सहन्ते ।

दिव्या अङ्गारा इरिणे न्युप्ताः शीताः सन्तो हृदयं निर्दहन्ति ॥ RV., X. 84, 9.

² पूर्वाह्णे अश्वान्ययुजे ibid., 11.

³ अक्षैर्मा दीव्यः कृषिमित्कृषस्व वित्ते रमस्व बहुमन्यमानः ।

तत्र गावः कितव तत्र जाया तन्मे वि चष्टे सवितायमर्यः ॥ ibid., 18.

While the former fought and died in struggle and strife the latter applied herself to the more delicate and tender causes of humanity. The tender traits of the woman were ^{Some other duties} fully realized by the husband who took on him to brave all the rough and tumble of the hard life of a colonizer and prepared for her a bed of roses without thorns to tread and lie upon ; although we shall see that it was not always a bed of roses that the wife trod and occasionally she ventured out in the open, assisted men in wars and battles and even fought and fell by them. The wife of king Khela is said to have lost her leg in a battle-field while fighting by the side of her husband. The poet praises the Ásvins for having replaced her leg with an iron substitute in the following verse :—

“When in the time of night, in Khela’s battle, a leg was severed like a wild bird’s pinion, Straight ye gave Viśpalā a leg of iron that she might move what time the conflict opened.”¹

It was a clash of two civilizations in which the Aryan wife must have had her share and we find that she actually had hers. It was Indrāṇī whose oblations made Indra glorious, most high² and victorious in the wars. On the call of a battle the hero took the aid of such stimulants as would make him ferocious and indifferent to pain. He drank deep the Soma beverage which was poured by his merry wife.³ “If the martial Ārya foresees the approach of his enemy,” translates Wilson, “and if the moment of combat has come, let his wife, accompanied by those who pour the Soma, give orders that this generous liquor be prepared.”⁴ Indrāṇī, the powerful and proud wife of Indra, declares : “All women are charmed by the courage and glory of the husbands who love them. A beautiful bride

¹ चरित्रं हि वेरिवाच्छेदि पर्णमाजा खेलस्य परितक्मयायाम् ।

सद्यो जङ्घामायसीं विस्पलायै धने हिते सतवे पत्यवत्तम् ॥ RV., I. 116, 15. cf. ibid., I. 112, 10 as also ibid., X. 102, 2.

² येनेन्द्रो हविषा कृत्यभवद्युन्युत्तमः । ibid., 159, 4.

³ ibid., 86, 15.

⁴ Wilson : Rig-Veda, Vol. III. p. 169, v. 8.

is happy, when she gives public homage to her well-beloved.”¹ “Women appeared as the worthy companion of the hero,” writes Bader in her inimitable style, “and the Ārya excited himself to valorous deeds by the thought of her who after the victory would proudly lean on his victorious arm.”²

The mother outlived the wife. The latter reached the climax of her power and importance when she became a mother. *Mātṛ*³ is the term by which she is expressed in the R̥gveda. Surely her high status and importance may be realized from the fact that *mātarā*⁴ alone was enough to signify both parents.

We find that whenever she is spoken of along with the father her name begins the compound, Mother for example mātarā-pitarā and mātā-pitarah.⁵ The use of the metonymies in the *Samhitā*⁶ may point to the same idea. As we have already mentioned the importance of the mother grew in proportion to the number of children she bore. Parśu, the daughter of Manu, is lauded by Indrāṇī, for having borne a score of children at a birth. ‘Her portion,’ says the poetess, ‘verily was bliss although her burthen caused her grief.’⁷ According to Indrāṇī the mother of a son deserved honour⁸ and she was actually much venerated in the society.

The Aryan was naturally very respectful towards his progenitors and this trait endures to this day. “Spare both him and her,” prays the seer, “who have given no birth, O Rudra; abstain from striking the persons who are dear to us.”⁹ We have already discussed in the opening chapter of this work

¹ ibid., Vol. VI, p. 69, v. 12.

² Women in Ancient India, p. 49.

³ RV., X. 18, 11.

⁴ ibid., III. 88, 3 ; VII. 2, 5.

⁵ ibid., IV. 6, 7.

⁶ ibid., I. 147, 8 ; 152, 6 ; 158, 6 ; IV. 4, 18 ; cf. VI. 10, 2.

⁷ पशुहिं नाम मानवी साकं ससूत विवसिम् ।

भद्रं भलं त्यस्या अमूढस्या उदरमास्यद्विद्वत्सादिन्द्र उत्तरः ॥ ibid., X. 86, 28.

⁸ Wilson : R̥ig-Veda, Vol. VI. p. 284, v. 10.

⁹ ibid., Vol. I. p. 807, v. 7.

the motherly traits of the goddesses. Here a few more references may be added to bring out the degree of reverence in which the mother was held and the attachment which the Aryan child bore to her. The wife considered her domestics as her sons and we read: "Her servants are like sons brought up in the same house, and whom a virtuous wife as well as her husband cherish equally."¹ The child in distress prays to Aditi, "May Aditi receive me as a mother receives her son and may my prayer go straight to her heart to abide there."² "As mothers care for their nurselings," says the poet, "so do Heaven and Earth follow thee with solicitude, O vigorous and redoubtable Indra!"³ "The generous and magnificent Soma, unites himself as tenderly to the waters, as a nursing attaches itself to its mother."⁴ Then we have lines like "sporting like young children under the eye of a good mother,"⁵ "Like children who submit themselves to their mother,"⁶ "O Earth, cover him, as a mother covers her infant with the skirts of her garment."⁷ It was the function of the mother to adorn her daughter for finding a husband.⁸ She even controlled the marriage of her daughter as we have seen before in the case of the queen of Rathaviti. While living, the Aryan looked to his mother for his strength and when dead, he sought the shelter of her lap, the touch of which he considered as soft as that of wool. The priest addresses the remains of the dead body of a warrior:

"Betake thee to the lap of earth the mother, of earth far-spreading, very kind and gracious.

Young dame, wool-soft unto the guerdon-giver, may she preserve thee from Destruction's bosom."⁹

¹ Wilson : Rig-Veda Vol. I. p. 195, v. 8.

² ibid., Vol. III. p. 308, v. 2.

³ ibid., Vol. V. p. 202, v. 6.

⁴ ibid., p. 362, v. 2.

⁵ ibid., VI. p. 211, v. 6.

⁶ ibid., Vol. III. p. 424, v. 8.

⁷ माता पुत्रं यथा सिचाम्येनं भूम ऊर्णुहि ॥ RV., X. 18, 11.

⁸ सुसङ्काशा मातृमृष्टेव योषा ॥ ibid., I. 128, 11.

⁹ उपसर्प मातरं भूमिमेतामुद्व्यचस पृथिवीं सुषोबाम् ।
ऊर्णमूदा युवतिर्दक्षिणावत एषा त्वा पातु निर्वृतेरुपस्थात् ॥ ibid., 10.

And then he implored the mother Earth :

“Heave thyself, Earth, nor press thee downward heavily :
afford him easy access, gently tending him.

Earth, as a mother wraps her skirt about her child, so cover him.”¹

We now pass on to consider the status, legal and otherwise, of the wife, mother and widow. Already we have discussed in detail in the second chapter of this work the legal status, rights and privileges of the daughter. With regard to her there is some evidence, although scanty, which throws enough light on her status, but with that to the wife, mother or widow, we have not the slightest evidence on which to build up some facts showing her proprietary rights in the ancestral land and her inheritance of other property. Although we read in a passage of a partition made by a father of his property² yet it is absolutely silent as regards a possible share given to his wife or his own share being reserved for his widow at his death if she happened to survive him and chose not to remarry. Thus the data with regard to her inheritance are negative. We have nothing on record to show that the wife retained the items of dowry for her own distinct use although it is possible, as remarked elsewhere, that they might have formed her strī-dhana. We learn from the instance of Śaśiyasī³ that women could at times give away much wealth as presents or alms, but again we are not sure if this right was one incidental to love and as a concession made to the wife by her husband or it was a property owned by the wife in her own right. Normally, it would seem, that the wife could not inherit or hold property. Thus the legal status of the Aryan woman was not as high as that of the Egyptian one during the time of Ankhesneferabra, who died before the conquest of Combyses, and “with

¹ उच्छञ्चस्व पृथिवि मा निबाधथाः सूपायनास्मै भव सूपवञ्चना ।

माता पुत्रं यथा सिचाम्येनं भूम ऊर्णुहि ॥ RV., I. 128, 11

² वि त्वा नरः पुरुत्रा सपर्यन्पितुर्न जित्रेवि वेदो भरन्त ॥ ibid., 70, 5.

³ ibid., V. 61, 10.

her closes the most extraordinary history of the legal status of a country's womankind that the world has ever known."

The husband seems to have been the master of his wife's person. He had complete control over her and we find that the germs of Manu's *pradānam svāmyakāraṇam*¹ and Kālidāsa's *Upapannā hi dāreṣu prabhutā sarvatomukhī*² may be traced to the R̥gveda itself. It is possible that the earlier usage of the patriarchal society had not become quite defunct in this age and women in certain cases were regarded as chattels. Such cases must be taken as exceptional, for in the whole range of the R̥gveda there is only one reference in the Social gambler's hymn³ where a wife has been actually staked as chattel and lost. But there too the wife, thus lost, is again referred to in verse 18, if it is not another wife (which does not seem probable from the gambler's feeling of loss in his staked wife), as waiting to be reclaimed along with his property.⁴

The wife thus staked seems to have become the property of the winner and served him as his wife, for the text says: "Others caress the wife of him whose riches the die hath coveted."⁵ Still it would appear that the wife stayed in the house of her winner only for a short time, may be in the fulfilment of a stipulation as we read in the verse alluded to above the following idea: "There are thy cattle, there thy wife, O gambler,"⁶ which clearly shows that after some time the wife reverted to her original husband. Nevertheless, the idea of her being caressed and fondled by another man in the interim is indeed revolting and points to the complete authority of the husband over his wife. But this solitary instance may not

¹ Manusmṛiti, V. 152.

² Abhi. Śāk., V. 26.

³ RV., X. 84, 2. 4.

⁴ तत्र गावः कितव तत्र जाया तन्ये वि चष्टे सवितायमर्यः ॥ ibid., 18.

⁵ म्रन्ये जायां परि मृशन्त्यस्य ibid., 4.

⁶ ibid., 18.

be taken as an evidence showing the existence of the usage in the society but as an abnormal and uncommon relic of a remote past. We may here refer to a remark made by Dr. A. S. Altekar on the point. He observes, "In India too in very early times women were regarded as chattel. They were given away as gifts in the Vedic age, as would appear from several hymns, which glorify the gifts of generous donors."¹ It is hardly possible to agree with the latter part of Dr. Altekar's observation. Unfortunately he does not cite the many verses to which he refers as containing allusions to gifts of women. We have, however, collected together and discussed all these references in our chapter on marriage. It may be submitted that none of these references allude to free Aryan women but to female slaves. It must be noted that since these women were given as absolute gifts and were classed along horses, cows and chariots, their status must have been lower than that of the real bride. Besides, the population of women was decidedly smaller than that of men as it was one desire on the part of the latter to beget ten sons on their wives. Again these possessions, i.e. women, of the kings and nobles must not have been free women. They were therefore slave girls. Female slaves, as other items of property, were a marked feature of the dowry or wealth given to the bride or the bridegroom.² These slaves were the aboriginal women captured in war, for they formed commonly part of the non-Aryan armies. There are several references to these being given away by kings and nobles to their priests and to others which we have already discussed at length elsewhere.³ The view taken by the learned scholar has been evidently occasioned by the occurrence of the phrase vadhūmanto in the passage.⁴ The context is the marriage of Kakṣivān Pajriya with the daughter of Svanaya and the

¹ The Position of Women in Hindu Civilisation, p. 258.

² R̥V., VIII. 19, 36 ; 68, 17 ; V. 47, 6 ; VI. 27, 8 ; I. 126, 8 ; VII. 18, 22 ; This point has already been elaborated elsewhere. Vide ante.

³ Vide ante.

⁴ R̥V., I. 126, 8.

grand daughter of king Bhāvya. On this occasion the king is said to have given away to the bridegroom hundreds of horses, ornamented with gold coins, hundreds of cows and chariots full of vadhūs along with the bride.¹ The term vadhū is easily misleading as it normally means a bride legally marriageable or a wife. It may be remembered that the female slaves, who were given away along with the Aryan bride, could make legal wives without marriage. They were given away with that appellation so that they might be appropriated without any further nuptial formalities and could be made to serve their Aryan master as his wives at his pleasure. This is what is implied by the term vadhū. It was out of such legally sanctioned riteless wedlocks of the Aryan fathers and slave mothers that some prominent Vedic personages like Kākṣivān, Ausīja, Kavaṣa or Vatsa were born. It would be hardly reasonable to believe that in those days of dearth of free Aryan women, when polygamy itself was only a privilege and luxury of the few, chariots full of brides could be given away freely. The reference to vadhūs in Dr. Altekar's citation is to slave-girls who were the spoils of war. And it may reasonably be held that free Aryan ladies could never be given away as chattel except in very exceptional cases of which we have a solitary, partial and doubtful instance furnished by the Rgveda, X. 84, 2 and 4.

There is no doubt about the fact, nevertheless, that the husband had complete mastery over his wife as already mentioned. The wife surely was dependent on man to a great extent even at that period when woman was kept comparatively in high honour. The gambler's case itself, howsoever exceptional, may prove it. The unfortunate habit of gambling among royal personages of the epics which marred the virtues and eclipsed the brightness of many a royal court, and caused even the most truthful and righteous Yudhiṣṭhira to stake his own dear consort, had its inauspicious beginning in the Rgvedic age or still earlier, and the 'dice-blinded' reaped no better consequences than the one during the epic age. The gambler's hymn refers to royal personages also being addicted to the vice and respecting the institution of gambling, for the gambler says, "They bend not even to the mighty's anger: the king himself pays homage and reveres them."¹

¹ RV., I. 126, 2-3.

The slave women could always be freely given away as chattel in gifts.² These women were undoubtedly non-Aryan for it is absolutely incredible that Aryans were Female slaves sold in slavery. The very fact that the Aryans were ever fighting in the enemy's land shows that their soldiers, always ready for war, did not encumber themselves with too many women. Thus the possibility of men being outnumbered by women seems to have been remote. And Trasadasyu, a mighty and benevolent king in peace and a turbulent leader in war who is credited with having given away fifty female slaves,³ may have captured them in war from the enemy's camp or cities. Then we must remember that there would have been a good number kept at home to allow fifty such slaves to be given away in charity. Such a good number cannot be imagined to have been of Aryan extraction so useless as to be captured and then thrown away in miserable slavery. These female slaves therefore must have been women of the aborigines, captured and enslaved, who very often made war upon their enemies, the Aryans, with their women utilized as soldiers trained for the purposes of war. A verse of the Rġveda records, "Women for weapons hath the Dāsa taken. What injuries can his feeble armies do me?"⁴ In Vṛtra's army his mother Dānu is also described to have fought Indra and to have fallen by the side of her son smitten by the thunderbolt of Indra.⁵ There is no direct reference

¹ उग्रस्य चिन्मन्यवे ना नमन्ते राजा चिदेभ्यो नम इच्छुणोति ॥ RV., X. 84, 8.

² ibid., I. 126, 8; V. 47, 6; VI. 27, 8; VII. 18, 22; VIII. 19, 86; 68, 17.

³ अदान्ते पौरुत्स्यः पञ्चाशतं त्रसदस्युर्वधूनाम् । ibid., VIII. 19, 86.

⁴ दासपत्नीरहिगोपा अतिष्ठन्निरुद्धा आपः पणिनेव गावः । ibid., I. 82, 11.

⁵ उत्तरा सूरधरः पुत्रः आसीद्दानुः शयै सदवत्सान धेनुः ॥ ibid., 9.

to the surrender of an Aryan woman except perhaps one in a fitful passion of dice when she was staked and lost to another man. And this winner caressed and fondled¹ her as his wife rather than treated her as a slave. After all, the dignity of the Aryan woman was a recognised fact, for even blind girls were taken in marriage knowingly with much sympathy and love as is borne out by a verse of the R̥gveda.² The person of the woman was almost sacred and inviolable.

In her house the wife was the mistress of all she surveyed. She had been brought in by the husband for the lordship of the family³ (gārhapatyāya). She was the mistress, the lady, of the household⁴ (gr̥hapatnī). She is sent forth to the house of her husband to rule her new home and on the occasion of her marriage she is addressed with much dignity in the following words: "Go to the house to be the household's mistress and speak as lady to thy gathered people."⁵ She was expected to address the vidatha,⁶ the popular assembly, like its other male members. Thus, at least theoretically, her position was supreme in the family although it may not have been so in actual practice. But we find the husband investing her with power with his words, "Gods, Aryaman, Bhaga, Savitar, Purandhi, have given thee to me to be my household's mistress."⁷ "Over thy husband's father," the priest exhorts her, "over thy husband's mother bear full sway. Over the sister of thy Lord, over his brothers rule supreme."⁸ Wife was an equal partner in life with her husband. The only disappointing trait was her disputed right to hold property or

¹ अन्ये जायां परिमृशन्त्यस्य RV., X. 84, 4.

² ibid., 27, 11.

³ ibid., 85, 27. 36.

⁴ ibid., 26.

⁵ गृहान्गच्छ गृहपत्नी यथासौ वशिनी त्वं विदथमा वदासि ॥ ibid.

⁶ ibid., 26. 27.

⁷ ibid. X. 85, 36.

⁸ सम्राज्ञी इवशूरे भव सम्राज्ञी इवश्वां भव ।

ननान्वरि सम्राज्ञी भव सम्राज्ञी भवि देवेषु ॥ ibid., 46.

inherit it. But in other social respects she had no disabilities and she was treated in household matters with due deference. The bride, as soon as she attained to the status of wife, assumed the dignity and power of an affectionate and kind ruler looking after the benefit of the individual members and of the household as a whole. She was thus a true sahadharminī of her husband and shared equally with him the responsibilities and the spiritual views and vows of the community.

She had a right to grumble and protest and she could raise her voice against her troubles. She was not the meek creature of the later times or that of other races of the contemporary world. Even if it be a fact, as we have shown it was, that her right, dignity and greatness were recognised in theory, easily she will rank high among the women of other races of her contemporary times. For, as we know, women of other ancient races, even of the other stalks of the Aryan race itself, have suffered legal inequities and social discomfitures to an enormous degree, and to them freedom has been unknown through the ages. The shackles on the rights of women in so enlightened a country as England could be removed only so late as the last century, and in other countries of the continent the removal of women's disabilities is an event of yesterday. The Rġvedic wife had her equality with her husband recognised by the society in theory and in social and religious matters she was his equal even in practice. In the matters of the management of the household, as we have already mentioned, she was all-supreme, and there it seems to have been her voice that mostly prevailed. In later times the Aryan wife became a play-thing, a non-individual creature, living not as an end unto herself but unto another, i.e. her husband. Her sacrifice and self-chosen suffering were not proportionately remunerated and returned by her self-seeking husband who took advantage of her ungrunting state. The Smrtis prescribed laws for her submissive conduct to her husband and lord. She obeyed ungrudgingly. They commanded her to identify her life with his ; she went a step further and identified her death with his. But her R̥gvedic sister had a tongue and could wield it. She had an invincible personality, a distinct individuality apart from her husband's. She could assert herself and could remonstrate against the failings of her husband. And she made herself heard. The invalidity of her man brought forth a protest from her but she showered her congratulations upon his restoration to strength and manhood. It has been said :

“What time her husband's perfect restoration to his lost strength and manhood was apparent,

His consort Śaśvati with joy addressed him,

Now art thou well, my lord, and shalt be happy.”¹

She was thus not a burden but strength to her husband, who treated her almost as an equal.

But sunshine has its shadows as well and the R̥gvedic picture also has its dark patches. We read a few uncharitable remarks regarding women. A passage, which we have already quoted elsewhere, asserts that many a maiden was an object of adoration to her wooer for the sake of her admirable riches.² Another records dissatisfaction over the indiscipline and the small intellect of

The other side of the picture women. It says, “Indra himself hath said : the mind of women brooks not discipline. Her intellect hath little weight.”³ A third is even more vehement in its denunciation of women. “With women,” says the R̥ṣi, “there can be no lasting friendship : hearts of hyenas are the hearts of women.”⁴ This statement comes as a sort of confession as it is put in the mouth of a woman herself. But fortunately it is spoken by Urvaśī, a courtesan (apsaras), and courtesans are proverbially known to

¹ अन्वस्य स्थूरं ददूशे पुरस्तादनस्य ऊरवरम्बमाणः ।

शश्वती नार्यभिचक्ष्याह सुभद्रमर्यं भोजनं विभवि ॥ R̥V., VIII. 1, 84.

² ibid., X. 27, 12.

³ इन्द्रश्चिद्धा तदब्रवीत्त्रिया अशास्यं मनः । ibid., VIII. 38, 17.

⁴ न वै स्त्रैणानि सख्यानि सन्ति सालावृक्षाणां हृदयान्वेता ॥ ibid., X. 95, 15.

love riches and wealth more than the person from whom they come. In the present incident the lover, King Purūravā, had entered into an agreement with the apsarā to live with her until the expiry of a term of stipulation at the end of which his contractual wife left him. The lover, infatuated by her charms and the pleasures her association had given him for a time, endeavoured to move her by threatening to destroy his life in her absence and the remark, cited above, is one she made in reply to his contemplated threat. Another reference, however, admits that many a woman is better than the godless and the niggardly man.¹ But this itself talks of women as being godly and generous with some reservation, and then we must remember that this remark is expressed by a man who has been immensely obliged by a woman (of whose bounties he speaks) through her rich largesses to him. This passage, in short, is part of a panegyric.

We shall have thus to admit that the woman who was an object of great honour was also maltreated sometimes by man. This trait is not, however, peculiar to the R̥gvedic community. Every society, whether ancient or modern, civilized or uncivilized, has its quota of bad men and vile women, of villains and harlots. The domestic sourness is not the evil of a particular community. It is a failing of man ; and likes and dislikes, loves and hatreds, friendships and enmities are the incidents of human nature. And, as such, the R̥gvedic community had its share of unmanly men and unwomanly women. The disparaging remarks, cited above, are but the outbursts of casual passion and they refer only to individual cases. In spite of these shortcomings of the Aryan life it can be said with unquestionable certainty that the domestic life was happy and contented where the husband cared for the feelings and sought for the satisfaction of his wife while the latter in her turn attended on him well and ministered to the needs and happiness of all those left to her charge inclusive of the bipeds and the quadrupeds. The wife thus contented by the authority she wielded in her house laid all that was hers at the feet of her master,¹ and did all to afford him the greatest degree of satisfaction when she waited lovingly on him having decked her beautiful person with all the aids of winning charms. Happy, contented mothers with their babes reposing soundly in their arms attracted many a poet to draw similes upon them.² The child in distress cried in grief to be restored to his dear loving mother: "Who shall to mighty Aditi restore us, that I may see my father and mother?"³ We have an example of the affection existing between the mother and son in a passage wherein the mother kisses him and he returns her kiss.⁴

¹ उन्नत्वा स्त्रीं क्षणीयसीं पुंसो भवति वस्यसी । ṚV., V. 61, 6.

In the free Aryan community life was gay and variegated. Men and women, as husbands and wives, strove side by side, fought shoulder to shoulder in the struggle of life and recounted their shortcomings to their gods while kneeling knee to knee. It was a life of peace and plenty where the woman and his chosen mate loved and played without the dread of encroaching restrictions, where

"With sons and daughters by their side they reach their full extent of life,
Both decked with ornaments of gold."⁵

¹ न मत्स्त्री सुभसत्तरा न सुयाशुतरा भुवत् ।

न मत्प्रतिच्यवीयसी न सक्थ्युद्यमीयसी विश्वस्मादिन्द्रि उत्तरः ॥ R.V., X. 86, 6.

² ibid., 18, 11, etc., vido ante.

³ को नो मह्या अदितये पुनर्दाप्सितरं च दृशेयं मातरं च ॥ ibid., I. 24, 1.

⁴ तं माता रेळिह स उ रेळिह मातरम् ॥ ibid., X. 114, 4.

⁵ पुत्रिणा ता कुमारिणा विश्वमायुर्व्यश्नुतः ।

उभा हिरण्यपेशसा ॥ ibid., VIII. 81, 8.

CHAPTER VI

ADORNMENT

The life of the R̥gvedic Aryan was plain and simple and his necessities were very few. He was a modest man of moderate means with the brilliant equipment of the mind and soul. Under his simple semi-stitched and loosely flowing garments there lay concealed a restless and inquisitive person possessing intelligence of much depth. With our meagre evidence we shall discuss in this chapter the nature of women's dress, ornaments, hair toilet and other physical embellishments as also, incidentally, a few items of furniture generally used by the fair sex of the R̥gvedic times. We shall first treat of the articles of dress.

The data furnished by the R̥gveda regarding the articles of dress for women are very scanty, yet they give us a glimpse of the social manners and customs with respect to the bodily adornment. We find that in spite of the simplicity of the agricultural life women were considerably given to dressing themselves in gay variegated clothes. The love of art and physical adornment is rather a peculiar feature of a free society. In a community where girls of marriageable age are free to choose their husbands and where due to the freedom from seclusion a kind of intense rivalry in getting a suitable match ensues, certainly personal decoration counts to a great extent. The R̥gvedic daughter was alive to this need of hers and she took pains to adorn herself in the most attractive and winning manner. Nor was her mother indifferent to this legitimate need of her daughter's. She decked her to the best of her ability¹ (and then sent her out to the festivities with a view to matrimony). Very frequently we come across references to girls attracting men after dressing themselves charmingly. A passage refers to a maiden adorning herself and waiting to meet her lover.² Even Uṣā 'like a loving matron for her husband, smiling and well attired, un-masks her beauty.¹ Again she 'docks her beauty shining forth with sunbeams, like women trooping to the festal meeting.'² The sage Vāmadeva beholds 'maidens decking themselves with gay adornment to join the bridal feast.'³ Another passage has : "...him whom sacrifices clothe even as a woman with her robe."⁴ At another place we find both the wife and her husband decking themselves.⁵ After having gained a fragrant dwelling, it was natural to place it under the charge of a new bride attired in fair apparel.⁶ In the manner of Uṣā, Vāc also 'hath shown her beauty to another as a fond well-dressed woman to her husband.'⁷ We find almost the same idea repeated in the following line : "This shrine have we made ready for thy coming, as the fond dame attires her for her husband."⁸

¹ सुसङ्काशा मातृमुष्टेव योषाविस्तत्वं कृणुष्वेदुशेकम् ॥ RV., I. 128, 11.

² कन्या शुष्ममाना ibid., X. 107, 10.

Sometimes the hymns themselves are referred to as 'clad in white and shining raiment.'⁹ Prayers to gods are meant to clothe them as though with a robe.¹⁰ Clothing was naturally indispensable. And this is why we find the Ṛṣi clothing his gods and prayers as well as his animals. We read of mantle worn by Earth and Heaven. "The robe," says the poet, "they spread upon the horse to clothe him, the upper covering and the golden trappings."¹¹ Again we are informed of fair and well-made robes,¹² and of white and shining raiment.

¹ जायेव पत्य उशती सुवासाः । RV., I. 124, 7.

² व्युच्छन्ती रश्मिभिः सूर्यस्याञ्ज्यङ्क्ते समनगा इव त्राः ॥ ibid., 8.

³ कन्या इव वहतुमेतवा उ अञ्ज्यञ्जाना अभि चकशीमि । ibid., IV. 58, 9.

⁴ यो वां यज्ञेभिरावृतोऽधिवस्त्रा वधूरिव । ibid., VIII. 26, 18.

⁵ जने मित्रो न दम्पती अनक्ति बृहस्पते वाजयाशूरिवाजी ॥ ibid., X. 68, 2.

⁶ भोजा जिग्युः सुरभि योनिमग्रे भोजा जिग्युर्वध्वं या सुवासाः ibid., 107, 9.

⁷ ibid., 71, 4.

⁸ जायेव पत्य उशती सुवासाः ibid., IV. 8, 2.

⁹ भद्रा वस्त्राण्यर्जुना वसाना सेयमस्मे सनजा पित्र्या धीः ॥ ibid., III. 89, 2.

¹⁰ ibid., X. 5, 4.

¹¹ यदश्वाय वास उपस्तृणन्त्यधीवासं या हिरण्यान्धस्मे ॥ ibid., I. 162, 16.

¹² वस्त्रेव भद्रा सुकृता वसू रथं न धीरः स्वपा अतक्षन् ॥ ibid., IV. 29, 15.

The above references will make it clear that the Aryans were not merely a spiritual people but they also cared for mundane affairs and wore many articles of dress. It is here that our progress in the description of their robes is impeded with difficulties, for the evidence that we have lacks much clarity and it neither specifically names the articles of dress nor does it distinguish the robes of men and women. We shall, however, attempt to bring out this distinction in the following pages, but before making an endeavour to this end it would be wiser to discuss in brief the nature of the fabric which the Aryans utilized for making their garments. We shall therefore start with discussing first the material of which the cloth was made.

It appears that the materials of which the cloth was made were of three classes, namely the skin, wool and cotton. Of these skin is the clothing of all primitive societies.

Material of cloth

Before other fabrics of which cloth is now made were discovered, skins were the principal material of clothing as they could be easily obtained in pretty abundance by the primitive man, whose occupation was mainly hunting. The love for the use of skins as garments on the part of the ancient Indian sages and Brahmins may have been a remnant of primitive times which they preserved till later ages when civilization had considerably advanced. The retirement and seclusion of the hermitages in the dense forests of India may have fostered the use of skins during even comparatively later times. The R̥gveda also records the use of skins with regard to the clothing of a few Brahmin sages and the gods.

Skins

"The Munis, girdled with the wind, wear garments soiled of yellow hue."¹ Evidently these garments were made of tanned skin. Maruts, in like manner, are described as wearing deer-skin.² In later times we find Kālidāsa describing wet skin garments (valkala) leaving a track of dripped water in the hermitage of Kanva.¹ We are not sure if skin robes were put on by women also. It is possible that like the 'Munis' of the above reference retired women sages or even worldly lady seers wore skin garments. In classical literature we find references to tapasvinīs and other women inmates of hermitages moving in skin dresses. Śakuntalā wears a skin robe which bore knots on the shoulders.² Sītā, in like manner, is dressed up in skins³ in the hermitage of Vālmiki.

¹ मूनयो वातरक्षनाः पिबाङ्गा वसते मला । RV., X. 186, 2.

² ibid., I. 186, 10.

Ūṛṇā or the sheep-wool was the most important material of which cloth was made. References to it are numerous which show incidentally that the Aryans were living in a cold climate which furthermore necessitated the use of wool. Śāmulya,⁴ which the bride wore at her nuptial and gave away to the officiating priest, was probably a woollen garment.⁵ Purified wool makes the robes of the Maruts.⁶ The bank of the river Paruṣṇī, the basin of which was the habitat of the R̥gvedic Aryans, is associated with wool.⁷ The partiality of the poet for the wool of Gandhāra⁸ sheep is easily explained by the excellent breed of the sheep of its locality which produced the softest fleeces. This trait of the Gandhāra sheep is preserved to this day. There can be hardly any doubt as to the fact that this ūṛṇā was generally obtained from the sheep. We have references to

¹ तोयाधारपथाश्च बल्कलशिखानिष्यन्दरेखाङ्किताः ॥ Abh. Śāk. I. 18.

² ibid., p. 28.

³ वन्येन सा बल्कलिनी शरीरं पत्युः प्रजासंततये बभार ॥ Raghu., XIV. 82.

⁴ परा देहि सामुल्यं ब्रह्मभ्यो विभजा वसु । RV., X. 85, 29.

⁵ Griffith: The R̥gveda, p. 271.

⁶ उत स्म ते परुष्णामूर्णा वसत शुन्यवः RV., V. 52, 9. cf. IV. 22, 2.

⁷ ibid. ; cf. वासो वायोऽजीनामा वासांसि ममूजत् ॥ ibid., X. 26, 6.

In the latter reference perhaps the wool of sheep is meant as in the first line of the verse the words śuca and śucā occur which respectively connote a pure he-goat and a pure she-goat.

⁸ सर्वाहिमस्मि रोमशा गन्धारीणामिवाविका ॥ RV., I. 126, 7.

ewes in the *R̥gveda*¹ and in a passage the excellence of the Gandhāra ewes has been celebrated.² It may be added, however, that wool was also got from goats.³ Wool seems to have been generally used for making cloth and it forms the poet's favourite simile to bring home to the mind the idea of softness.⁴ The Punjab and its northern (Kashmir) and north-western vicinity furnished the Aryans with enough wool for warm clothing.

Of cotton we have no direct evidence in the R̥gveda but from the kind of clothes which the Aryans wore it may be supposed to have been known to them. In the Cotton Samhitā itself we have no reference to the cultivation of its plant but the different decorative patterns in the cloth which we shall mention below could have been best worked out in cotton material. Perhaps the primitive societies all over the world were ignorant of the cultivation of cotton but undoubtedly the Indians knew it as early as the chalcolithic age as pieces of cotton cloth have been found in the excavations of Mohenjo-Daro. The Indus-valley civilization was anterior to and in its later stages even contemporaneous with the R̥gvedic civilization. Therefore it may be held without fear of contradiction that the cultivation of cotton was known to the agriculturist Aryans and that they had already started making use of cotton for the purposes of dress. At least we know that the Greeks of Alexander's train had seen fields of cotton plants, and had admired and mistaken them for wool-plants. The cultivation of cotton therefore must have been started in India even before the advent of the Aryans.

We shall now proceed to discuss the articles of dress worn by women. It has already been mentioned above that the Samhitā seldom distinguishes between the respective

¹ RV., I. 128, 7; X. 95, 8.

² सर्वाहमस्मि रोमशा गन्धारीणामिवाविका || ibid., I. 126, 7.

³ ibid., X. 26, 6.

⁴ ऊणमिवा ibid., 18, 10, etc.

robes of men and women, and in most cases the same articles of clothing are attributed to both the sexes. A number of articles of dress have been mentioned, namely

Articles of Dress Adhivāsa,¹ Vāsa,² Sic,³ Śāmulya,⁴ *Drāpi*⁵ and Peśas.⁶ It would seem that the woman put on four pieces of dress, i.e. an undergarment, a garment, an upper garment and a covering mantle. Of these the garment was perhaps a seldom used piece put on by personages enjoying an exceptionally high status in the society. Sārī, as put on by modern Indian ladies, forming both the pleated skirt as well as the covering of the breast, was unknown. It would appear that the upper part of the body was generally uncovered although the use of a shawl, adhivāsa, or a close fitting vest, drāpi, would have occasionally served that purpose. We find that terracotta female figurines and sculptured images of the Śunga period and of subsequent ages support this custom as the absence of an upper clothing in their case must have been a continuation of the earlier Rgvedic custom. Probably the instance of Uṣā keeping her breast region uncovered has been taken from the habits of a dancing girl as the goddess has been compared to a nṛtū.⁷ But except in a few cases

Śāmulya hardly an example exists in the Saṁhitā to show that an upper garment was used by women, and, besides, the evidence of later sculpture on the point is significant. Therefore Dr. Altekar's suggestion that Śāmulya was probably a *sārī*⁸ is difficult to accept. Undoubtedly it referred to an undergarment, but probably to a skirt in the pleated effect. The sārī is wound up and partly covers the bosom. Śāmulya

¹ RV., I. 140, 9; 162, 16; X. 5, 4.

² ibid., X. 102, 2.

³ ibid., 10, 11; I. 95, 7; III. 53, 2.

⁴ ibid., X. 85, 29.

⁵ ibid., I. 25, 18; IX. 100, 9.

⁶ ibid., IV. 86, 7; VII. 42, 1; VIII. 81, 8.

⁷ नृत्त्रिनापोनृति वक्ष उक्षेव वर्जहम् । ibid., I. 92, 4.

⁸ The Position of Women in Hindu Civilisation, p. 851.

was probably made of wool. Professor Sarkar, however, suggests that it even may have been of 'silk-cotton wool.'¹

The garment or the piece of dress at times covering the upper part of a woman's body was called drāpi. It seems to have been 'a close-fitting (R̥V., I. 166, 10) and gold-embroidered vest used by men and women'² of position. It Drāpi was put on by women also as, although not in the R̥gveda, a reference to it is preserved in the Atharva Veda where its wearer has been likened to a courtesan.³ It was decidedly a robe used by important men. In the R̥gveda Varuṇa⁴ and Pavamāna⁵ wear it. Women in exceptional cases made use of drāpi. Normally the region of the bosom remained uncovered.

Occasionally an upper garment, a kind of scarf (the uttarīya of later times) called Vāsa, was worn by women. It covered the head and may have perhaps even served sometimes Vāsa as a covering for the bosom. Mudgalānī's vāsa, evidently this upper scarf, was seen streaming up in the sky.⁶ Vāsa served the purposes of the modern orhni. Sic was obviously its broad border with which a mother covered the child in her lap.⁷ It was the anchala or the Sic border of the upper garment. The horizons at sunrise and sunset have been compared to the borders (sicau) of the sky-cloth.⁸

Over and above these, women wore an outer loose-flowing garment, adhivāsa. Perhaps adhivāsa was an unsewn shawl

¹ Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. His. of Ind., p. 59.

² ibid., p. 67.

³ V. 7, 10.

⁴ R̥V., I. 25, 18.

⁵ ibid., IX. 100, 9.

⁶ ibid., X. 102, 2.

⁷ ibid., 18, 11.

⁸ उदयमीति सवितेव बाहू उभे सिचौ यतते भीम ऋज्जन । ibid., I. 95, 7. cf. III. 58, 2.

covering the entire person of the woman except her head.

Its all-covering nature is attested by the fact Adhivāsa that the forests on the Earth are likened to it in the R̥gveda.¹ Its use may have been made on occasions when women went out of the house to attend social functions. A passage in the Saṃhitā refers to women 'dressed in white garments and moving slowly like the milk that colours it.'²

Ordinarily women within the house put on an under-garment and an upper scarf covering the head. We may cite here the pertinent remark made by the authors of the Vedic Index on the dress of the Indo-Aryans. "The Vedic Indian," they observe, "seems often to have worn three garments—an undergarment (nīvī), a garment and an overgarment (adhivāsa RV. I. 140, 9 ; 162, 16 ; X. 5, 4) which was probably a mantle, and for which the names atka and drāpi also seem to be used.
 This accords with the description of the sacrificial garments given in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa which comprises a tārpya, perhaps a 'silken under-garment'; secondly a garment of undyed wool and then a mantle, while the ends of the turban after being tied behind the neck, are brought forward and tucked away in front....A similar sort of garments in the case of women appears to be alluded to in the Atharva Veda (VIII. 2, 16 ; XIV. 2, 50) and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (V. 2, 1, 8). There is nothing to show exactly what differences there were between male and female costumes nor what was exactly the nature of the clothes in either case."³

The Aryans thus seem to have been well advanced in the art of weaving which had long been known to them. Spinners and weavers were known. Aufrecht, Muir and Griffith explain correctly the meaning of the word *siri*⁴ as the female weaver.

¹ I. 140, 9.

² VIII. 17, 7.

³ Vedic Index, Vol. II, p. 292.

⁴ RV., X. 71, 9.

The art of weaving was a busy trade which was occasionally chosen as a career by women. Patterns of clothes were various. Stylish ladies affected dyed gay clothes.¹ We read of Maruts also as putting on robes of purified wool. This purified wool may have been 'bleached or dyed.'² Brocades were known and rich gold threads were inter-woven with fibers of cotton or wool. The eastern and western horizons at the time of the sunrise and sunset with the bordering bright

Brocades golden clouds have been compared to the borders of a scarf³ brocaded with gold threads. Uṣā, the Dawn, is described as putting on such a brocaded robe. Peśas is explained by Professor Sarkar following Griffith and others as 'gold-embroidered cloth generally.'⁴ But if the word peśas alone could convey that idea, the poet's use of the adjective hiraṇya in certain cases⁵ would indeed be redundant. It seems that the peśas was a costly cloth which when brocaded and embroidered with gold-threads was termed hiraṇyapeśas like the hiraṇyadrāpi of the Atharva Veda.⁶ Our interpretation is borne out by a passage in the *Ṛgveda*⁷ which refers to young girls wearing beautiful dress (supesāḥ). In the phrase supesāḥ we find peśa, dress (precious, and bright as clarified butter⁸), qualified by su, beautiful. Hiraṇyapeśas, a dress brocaded and inlaid with gold was worn by rich husbands and wives⁹ who could afford it. The thread of gold must have made the cloth precious and beautiful, 'heavy and brilliant.'¹⁰ The intricate designs¹¹ of the cloth give much credit

¹ ṚV., I. 92, 4 ; X. 1, 6.

² हिरण्यवः ibid., V. 52, 9 ; cf. Some Asp. of the Ear. His. of Ind., p. 59.

³ ṚV., I. 95, 7 ; III. 53, 2.

⁴ Some Asp. of the Ear. His. of Ind., p. 67.

⁵ ṚV., VIII. 81, 8.

⁶ V. 7, 10.

⁷ चतुष्कपर्दा युवतिः सुपेशा घृतप्रतीका वयुनानि वस्ते । X. 114, 8.

⁸ ibid.

⁹ उभौ हिरण्यपेशसा ॥ ibid., VIII. 81, 8.

¹⁰ ibid., VII. 84, 11.

¹¹ ibid., II. 8, 6.

to the Indo-Aryans for their weaving excellence. Professor Sarkar makes an important observation with regard to the article of dress called peśamsi when used with reference to dancing girls (nṛtā). He says that "it might refer to a pleated skirt made of such brocaded cloth, like the medieval and modern 'ghāghrā' or 'peśwaz.'"¹

We have no clear evidence as to the extent of use of stitched clothes. But since we know of the existence of the needle and the needlework from the R̥gveda stitched clothes we may safely conclude that stitched clothes were also used. In fact brocade work could not have been possible without a needle. The peśas and drāpi could hardly be made without the help of the needle. The cold climate of the Punjab and the north-western frontier must have necessitated the use of stitched clothes.

In the whole range of the R̥gveda we nowhere come across a single reference to the foot-wear and we may be therefore justified in concluding that the women did not make use of shoes. Professor Sarkar rightly thinks that in view of both the men and women wearing anklets the use of the foot-wear must have been limited.²

Love of ornaments has been a racial trait of the Hindus, and the Aryans, whether men or women, sought them with eagerness. The frequency with which gold has been mentioned attests to the fact that it abounded in the country and ornaments made of gold and precious stones were worn in profusion. From the earliest pieces of terracottas and sculptures we find the love of men and women for ornaments reflected in the abundance of their use. There was a good deal of love-making among the younger people and we frequently come across references to damsels decking themselves for attracting men. Ornaments must have been a great auxiliary to such girls. Gods, like men, wore ornaments of gold and jewels. When we find 'the coursers decked with pearly trappings,'¹ 'chariots decked with pearls'² and other such animate beings and inanimate objects as the horses and chariots decorated with precious stones, we cannot but naturally infer that women had access to dazzling jewelry.

¹ Some Asp. of the Ear. His. of Ind., p. 67.

² ibid., p. 70.

Many a time we read of the many-hued (citra) and honoured necklace³ (niṣka). A passage mentions the Maruts wearing a set of women's ornaments, i. e. 'anklets on feet.... gold on breast...., visors wrought of gold on heads.'⁴ Another has the following: "Your rings, O Maruts, rest upon your shoulders and chains of gold are twined upon your bosom."⁵ Niṣka, the small gold plates of which these necklaces were made, in later times came to mean a particular kind of gold coins. Is it possible that the coins named Niṣka had already become current, in howsoever crude a form, in the R̥gvedic period itself? It is common in India to-day to string together gold mohurs or silver rupees to form a necklace. Women, like men, wore ear-pendants on the ears⁶ the like of which are perhaps represented on the ears of pre-Mauryan terracotta female figurines. We have also a reference to heavy ornaments decking the shoulders⁷ but it is difficult to explain or even conjecture what these ornaments were. On no piece of ancient sculpture or pre-Mauryan or primitive terracotta have such ornaments for shoulders been found as the R̥gveda mentions. We find, however, on ancient pre-Mauryan crude terracotta pieces of the mother-goddess very thick and heavy

¹ R̥V., I. 126, 4.

² ibid., 85, 4; cf. ibid., 162, 16.

³ ibid., II. 34, 10; V. 19, 8; VIII. 48, 15.

⁴ ibid., V. 54, 11.

⁵ ibid., VII. 56, 18.

⁶ ibid., I. 122, 14.

⁷ अश्वेषा वः पद्मयेषु लादयः ibid., I. 166, 9; cf. ibid., V. 54, 11.

ear-rings falling from the low hanging ear-lobes and resting on the shoulders. Sometimes it becomes difficult to decide whether these were designed by the artist as ornaments for the ears or the shoulders or for both. Possibly the present reference embodied a similar allusion. Armlets,¹ bangles² and anklets³ were worn by women as well as by men. Perhaps rings for fingers were also in use although we do not find them specifically mentioned. The nose-ring is conspicuously absent from the list of ornaments furnished by the R̥gveda. Nowhere do we find the slightest allusion made to it. "It is curious," says Mr. Mehta, "that there is no mention of the nose-ring, and those who connect this ornament with the Naqil or the gilt chain, that was put round the woman to make her feel that she was not the free creature as she was in the past, but subject to the custom of the tribe to which she was introduced, would be able to point to the introduction of this ornament as marking the transition from the early Vedic to the much manacled Pauranic degradation."⁴ But Dr. Altekar has very ably shown that "the nose-ring was unknown throughout the whole of India during the entire Hindu period. Hindu sculptures of Puri and Rajputana of the post-Muslim period begin to show the nose-ring for the first time. Both the positive and the negative evidence thus shows that the nose-ring is not a Hindu ornament."⁵

Hymn 85 of the tenth book of the R̥gveda refers to women's ornaments. The ornaments with which the bride was adorned by her brother and father were her own property which she could give away on occasions like marriage. Thus we have seen that on the neck she wore a necklace of pearls, and big hanging rings in the ears rested on her shoulders. Arms

¹ RV., V. 58, 2.

² ibid., I. 168, 8.

³ ibid., V. 54, 11.

⁴ Foreword to Women in R̥gveda, 1st. Ed., pp. iii-iv.

⁵ Pos. of Wom. in Hin. Civi., pp. 863-64.

were decked with gold bracelets, wrists with bangles and ankles with anklets. Perhaps there were also rings adorning the fingers of the hands.

Ornaments were only external additions to beauty and women did not forget to enhance their natural charms by other means. Their attention seems to have been paid most to the hair. Hair was well combed and oiled,¹ parted and braided,² and let to hang down the shoulders and the waist. The sacred altar has been compared to a woman in the following line: "The youthful one, well shaped, with four locks braided, brightened with oil, puts on the ordinances."³ She thus used to brighten her hair by putting oil in it. Again we have a reference to a dame with lovely hands and charms, with broad hair plaits and ample hips.⁴ Broad hair plaits were the most characteristic features of the hair toilet. Loose tresses have been referred to in the Rġveda with precision and frequency. Rodasī has loose tresses⁵ beautifully hanging on her back. A flame of fire has been compared to the tresses of a maiden :

"The maidens with long tresses hold him in embrace, dead
They rise up again to meet the loving one."⁶

Sinīvālī has been noted for her long broad tresses.⁷ These tresses were evidently knit after the hair had been combed. Several fashions of wearing hair seem to have been in vogue. The later variety of styles of arranging hair as evidenced by the ancient paintings and sculptures of India appears to have already made a mark in the Rġvedic period. These styles, however, are only too vaguely indicated in the Samhitā to be

¹ RV., X. 114, 8.

² ibid., I. 140, 8 ; 167, 5.

³ ibid., X. 114, 8.

⁴ ibid., 86, 8.

⁵ ibid., I. 167, 5.

⁶ ibid., II. 89, 2.

⁷ ibid., II. 92, 6 ; VII. 55, 8.

described here. The young girl seems to have worn her hair in four braids¹ although the fashions of hair-dressing had not become stereotyped.

The sense of art and aesthetics had reached a high watermark and we find quite a good number of the articles of toilet enjoined for the use of a nāgaraka by Vātsyāyana already put to use by the men and women of the Indo-Aryan society. Thus we have already surveyed women donning diaphanous attires and wearing the choicest ornaments of gold, pearls and precious stones (maṇi). We have also seen how they arranged their hair in various winning styles. We shall now describe in brief the last item of their toilet,—the embellishment of the body with the aid of ointments and perfumes. Embellishing the body with sweet perfumes had already come into Perfumes use. We read Aśvins compared to two fare dames embellishing their bodies.² Aranyānī, the forest queen, is similarly described in the line : "Now have I praised the forest queen, sweet-scented, redolent of balm."³ Similarly wives attending the funeral were expected to embellish their bodies with perfumes.⁴ The matrons, whenever they went out, were perfumed and enbalméd with the 'odorous sweets.'⁵

 This finished, women put unguent⁶ to their eyes the charm and strength of which have become so much a subject of description in the works of Kālidāsa. It has been noted by a celebrated scholar that there were perhaps four particular occasions for such sprinkling of perfumes. Girls might have used them to attract notice. The apsarases, the prostitutes, might have bathed in perfumed water to entice lovers. The wife who always waited for her loving husband did not forget to embellish her body with all sorts of adornments, as Kālidāsa's later

¹ चतुष्कर्पा युवतिः RV., X. 114, 8.

² ibid., II. 29, 2.

³ ibid., X. 146, 6.

⁴ ibid., 18, 7.

⁵ ibid., VII. 55, 8.

⁶ ibid. ; ibid., X. 85, 7.

notion—*strīṇām priyāloka-phalo hi vesahī*¹—had already been realized by the Ṛgvedic woman and was actually being lived by her to a considerable extent. The following verse of the funeral hymn brings out a partial picture of the toilet of the Indo-Aryan woman :—

“Let these unwidowed dames with noble husbands adorn themselves with fragrant balm and unguent.

Decked with fair jewels, tearless, free from sorrow, first let the matrons pass unto their houses.”²

Although it will not be strictly logical to discuss in this chapter the items of furniture which decorated her household, nevertheless, a succinct reference to such of these as were used by women, it is supposed, will not be altogether out of place. We may therefore give below a brief

Furniture account of their furniture. We find a few articles of furniture especially associated with women and the inner apartments of a house. Tālpā, mentioned in the *Ṛgveda*³ and associated with the bridal⁴ and the couple⁵ in the Atharva Veda, is such an article of furniture. Prof. Sarkar correctly thinks that it was the nuptial bed.⁶ He further suggests that it may have been a ‘combination of a settee and a coffer;’⁷ “such marriage-coffers,” continues the learned Professor, “evidently could be used as couch or bed; and it is noteworthy that both these types of bed (Tālpa and Vahya) are found in the inner apartments of the mid-Himālayan villager’s dwelling house.”⁸ From a passage in the

¹ Ku., vii. 22.

² इमा नारीरविधवाः सुपत्नीराञ्जनेन सपिषा सं विशन्तु ।

अनश्रवोजन्मीवाः सुरत्ता आरोहन्तु जनयो योनिमग्ने ॥ ṚV., X. 18, 7.

³ ibid., VII. 58, 8.

⁴ XIV. 2; 81, 41.

⁵ V. 7, 12.

⁶ Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. His. of Ind., p. 50.

⁷ ibid.

⁸ ibid.

R̥gveda we learn that the tālp̥ya was the furniture of a palatial building or a princely house (harmya)¹ on which we find ladies reclining². This shows that tālp̥ya was kept in the inner apartments of a house. It was perhaps a heavy structure fixed at a spot within the house. The heavy nature of its structure may also be inferred from the fact that talpa in the *Mānasāra*³ literature and the works⁴ of Kālidāsa means also a turret. Thus tālp̥ya would mean a heavy and high bedstead with small turrets. We use even in these days high beds with railings. Tālp̥ya may have been such a bed. Vahya,⁵ on the other hand, as its etymology suggests (i.e. one which could be easily borne) may have been a lighter couch used by women. Possibly it was the nuptial bed of which the marriage hymn indirectly speaks.⁶ It may have been given away to the bride in dowry (as it is the custom even now among the Hindus) and would have thus been carried (vahya). The R̥gveda associates it with women⁷ who are said to be sleeping on it.⁸ It is significant that the Atharva Veda associates it with the nuptial ceremony⁹ which the bride mounts¹⁰ and on which she sleeps with her husband.¹¹ Kośa,¹² which is given to the bride in dowry and is sent away to the house of the bridegroom, may, beside meaning treasure or property (dowry) of some description, also connote the object in which such treasure is kept. It might then

¹ ṚV., VII, 55, 8.

² श्रीदेव्या ṚV., VII, 55, 8.

³ Acharya : A Dictionary of Hindu Architecture.

⁴ Raghu., V. 75, XVI. 6, 11, XIX. 2. Of these all but XVI. 11 mean a high bed.

⁵ ṚV., VII, 55, 8.

⁶ ibid., X, 85, 7.

⁷ ibid., IV, 5, 3 ; VII, 55, 8.

⁸ ibid., IV, 5, 3.

⁹ XIV, 2, 80.

¹⁰ ibid., IV, 20, 8.

¹¹ ibid., XIV, 2, 80.

¹² ṚV., X, 85, 7.

mean a coffer containing objects given away to and meant for the use of the bride. Kos, meaning a coffer, is still used in certain parts of the United Provinces and Bihar speaking the Bhojapurī dialect. It is significant that both these articles of furniture, the bed-stead and the coffer, should still form the items of dowry of a modern Hindu bride.

CHAPTER VII EDUCATION

Religion influenced every branch of life of the Indo-Aryan. Sacrifices played a great part in the religious and spiritual society of the R̥gveda. When the Aryans first set foot on the Indian soil they were impressed greatly with the forces of nature, both cruel and benign. The prayers in gratitude to these forces were uttered by them which, with others, gave rise to the Samhitās. The immigrants were born poets and whatever their impassioned language touched was beautified. The poets who created the great literature of the R̥gveda were bards of divinities and were mostly attached to the royal courts. Their learning and wealth of poetry had become the property of the family which descended from father to son. The family itself had become an institution for imparting education—the family lore—where the sons, as also probably the daughters, were taught in the language and literature of the times. In the R̥gveda is preserved an allusion to such a school where the teacher and the taught met and the commingled voices of the latter in imitation of the lessons of the former rang out like those of the frogs gathered together in the rainy season. The text so ably translated by Griffith reads :—

“Each of these twain receives the other kindly, while they are revelling in the flow of waters.
When the frog moistened by the rain springs forward and Green and Spotty both combine their voices.¹
When one of these repeats the other's language, as he who learns the lesson of the teacher,
Your every limb seems to be growing larger,
as ye converse with eloquence on the waters”²

¹ अन्यो अन्यमनु गूष्णात्येनोरपां प्रसर्गे यदमन्दिषाताम ।
मण्डूको यदभिवृष्टः कनिष्कन्पुष्टिः सम्पृङ्क्ते हरितेन वाचम् ॥ RV., VII. 108, 4.

² यदेषामन्यो अन्यस्य वाचं शाक्तस्येव वदति शिक्षमाणः ।
सर्वं तदेषां समुधेव पर्वयत्सुवाचो वदयनाध्यप्सु ॥ ibid., 5.

It is very probable that the daughters of the family also mingled their voices, for they must have been taught somewhere to make themselves seers and poetesses (as we shall see below that they were) and nowhere indeed could so healthy an atmosphere be found as the company of their father. The teaching was mainly by rote the futility of which has been noted by the Rġveda where it registers its protest through a hint against the parrot or frog-like reciters¹ of the Veda.

Women, it would appear, were educated both in the spiritual as well as temporal subjects. The spiritual side comprised of a training in the religious lore and perhaps also in the historical tradition and mythology which made them at times rsis of hymns; and the temporal side comprised of a training in the fine arts as well as in the military science in certain special cases. We shall make an attempt in the following pages to give an account of this liberal education imparted to women.

The society which aimed more at the spiritual attainments of life and gave its women an important and imperative function in the daily and occasional sacrifices, was alive to their mental needs and it endeavoured to equip them with a training to that end. The maiden who had to seek a husband for herself with the aid of her elders would find her task easier if her intellectual attainments were added to her physical charms. As a qualification for marriage the education of the maiden was considered as important as that of the man. The text stipulates: "An unmarried young learned daughter should be married to a bridegroom who like her is learned. Never think of giving in marriage a daughter of very young age."² The Yajurveda, which depicts almost the same conditions and

¹ उत् त्वं सख्ये स्थिरपीतमाहुर्नैनं हिन्वन्त्यपि वाजिनेषु ।

अथेन्वा चरति मायथैष वाचं सुश्रुवां अफलाम्पुष्पाम् ॥ RV., X. 71, 5.

² आ धेनवो धुनयन्तामशिवीः सबर्दुषाः शशया अग्रदुग्धाः ।

नव्या नव्या युवतयो भवन्तीर्महद्देवानामसुरत्वमेकम् ॥ ibid., III. 55, 16.

times as the R̥gveda, also records a similar view. It says, "A young daughter who has observed brahmacarya (i.e. finished her studies) should be married to a bridegroom who like her is learned."¹ The Atharva Veda is equally emphatic in its support of female education. It records, "A king by observing brahmacarya (the vow of study) can protect his kingdom easily. An ācārya can impart education to his students if he has himself observed his brahmacarya. A young daughter after the observance of brahmacarya should be married to a young man."²

In this manner education was made almost a necessary condition of marriage. This education was imparted to the girl in her maidenhood and, as already mentioned, under the eye of the father perhaps in company with her brothers and such other kinsmen.

The nature of the maiden's education is not directly evidenced in the R̥k Samhitā and it is difficult to determine what subjects she read. We shall, however, attempt to piece together the indirect data that we have, and bring out the courses of the woman's education. There is no doubt that in the age of warfare in which the Indo-Aryans lived the nature of training for common men, nobles and princes, except in case of the priestly families, would have been mostly military in character. But in the case of women, save in a few instances of the Kṣatriya families, the courses of study must have been more humane. On examination, we find that normally their education centred round the acquisition of language and literature, the fine arts and the military science. We shall discuss these heads one by one below.

¹ उपायाम्बूहीतोस्यादित्येव्यस्त्वा ।

विष्णुरगार्यते सोमस्तं रक्षस्व मा त्वादवन् ॥ YV., VIII. 1.

² ब्रह्मचर्येण तपसा राजा राष्ट्रं विरक्षति ।

आचार्यो ब्रह्मचर्येण ब्रह्मचारिणमिच्छते ।

ब्रह्मचर्येण कन्यायुवानं विन्दन्ते पतिम् ॥ AV., XII. 3, 17, 18.

That women were educated in the cultured and polished language and current literature can hardly be doubted.

We find the anukramanī of the R̥gveda ascribing to them a number of hymns. A score of

Language and Literature

names of women are on record showing their eligibility to become ṛṣis and the nature of the poetry they could compose. The compositions of these ladies are no less gifted in point of music and poetry than those of the men. With great tremour and zeal they send forth their prayers to the gods for the good of the suffering humanity. The foremost of these ṛṣis is Ghosā, the wife of the great seer Kakṣivān. She has been mentioned several times¹ in the R̥gveda while two long hymns, 39 and 40 of the tenth maṇḍala stand to her credit. This 'daughter of a king' is equally mighty in her conception of divinity and the invocation of the Áśvins, who, in consequence of her prayer to them, give her Kakṣivān for husband in an advanced age. Lopāmudrā, another lady Ṛṣi, is credited with having composed a hymn² jointly with her husband Agastya. Apālā addresses hymn 91 of the tenth book and in like manner invokes Agni in the fifth book. To Romaśā, another wife of Kakṣivān and the daughter of king Svanaya and the grand-daughter of Bhāvya is ascribed a beautiful verse of fine imagery and tender feeling in which she says that she is as harmless and docile as the 'ewes of the Gandhāras'. This she utters to her father-in-law, the father of Kakṣivān, while presenting herself after her marriage to the kinsmen of her groom. Sūryā, the daughter of Savitā, the sun, is a remarkable Ṛṣi who narrates the incidents of her own wedding with Soma, the moon. This ¹ I. 117; 7; X. 36, etc.

² ibid., X. 40, 5.

³ ibid., I. 179.

⁴ सर्वाहिमस्मि रोमशा गन्धारीणामिवाविका || ibid., 126, 7.

hymn,¹ however, is composed of a traditional set of forty-seven Vasukara's wife verses loosely strung together. The seer and speaker of the first verses of hymn 28 of the tenth book is Vasukara's wife, while the mother of the Gaupāyanas Gaupāyana's along with her sons, Bandhu, Subandhu, Śruta-mother bandhu and Viprabandhu, is that of X, 60. The latter is also the independent seer of the sixth verse of that hymn.

Indrāṇī, the powerful consort of Indra, is the speaker of the verses 2, 4-7, 9, 10, 15, 18, 22 and 28 of the hymn 86 of the tenth book. She is also the independent Ṛṣi of a Indrāṇī powerful hymn², entitled 'the Jealous Wife's Spell', which she utters while digging out a herb for arresting the influence of an ascendant wife over her husband Indra. Under the name of Śacī Paulomī—very probably another name of Indrāṇī—she is made the author of another hymn³, which records her success over her other rivals probably as a result of the efficacy of the herb to which she refers in the earlier hymn. Both the hymns of Indrāṇī are remarkable specimens of lyrical beauty which contain, besides, Indra's mothers a language endowed with exceptional vigour.
 The mothers of Indra are also credited with the composition of a hymn,⁴ and thus we see that all the inmates of Indra's house are gifted with the talents of Juhū poetry. This would also incidentally show that at least among the higher classes education among women had reached a high watermark. Juhū, the wife of Śraddhā Brahmā, speaks the hymn 109 of the tenth book, and Śraddhā Kāmāyanī is credited with the authorship of a Sarparājñī and hymn⁵ of which she herself is the deity. Another Mamatā lady Ṛṣi Sarparājñī addresses the hymn X, 189, while Mamatā is the author of the second verse of VI, 10.

¹ RV., X. 85.

² ibid., 145 (उपनिषत्सप्ततीवाघनम्)

³ ibid., 159.

⁴ ibid., 158.

⁵ ibid., 151.

Yamī, a powerful woman, who speaks undeterred of her love for her twin brother and calls him a coward and a weakling, is the author of the hymn X, 10 jointly Yamī with her brother. In the entire range of the R̥k Samhitā she stands out conspicuously as a lady of her own type, unparalleled and uncontrolled. The dialogue, contained in the hymn of which she is the principal speaker, is the earliest piece in the direction of dramatic literature. Another such piece is preserved in the hymn X, 95 of which Urvaśī is partly the author. Urvaśī, an apsaras wedded to king Purūravā in accordance with the terms of a contractual Urvaśī marriage, is a defying party in the dialogue of the hymn. She is the seer and speaker of the verses 2, 5, 7, 9, 11, 13, 15, 16 and 18 of hymn 95 of the tenth book.

Even rivers have been personified and they enter into conversation with the sage Viśvāmitra in R̥V. III, 33. The evidence cited above will amply show that women were freely trained to grow into ṛṣis and that no resentment on the part of men was felt on this account.

A study of the verses and hymns composed by these authoresses shows that they were versed in the folklore and the traditions of the time. These hymns give Tradition and Mythology us a glimpse into the religious beliefs, social superstitions and the mythological traditions and casual pre-historic ideas of the times prior to the R̥gveda. We know that the Purāṇās, which were compiled at a much later date, contain traditional history of a pre-R̥gvedic society in their earlier parts. It is possible that some such literature existed during the time of the R̥gveda in some form from where the Purāṇās drew their contents. It would appear that these traditions were a subject of study for the R̥gvedic women. One of the most vigorous hymns of the R̥gveda is that¹ of which the authorship is due to Vāk, the daughter of Ambhr̥ṇa. It embodies in a language of tremendous force and vigour the conception of the unity of the universe. Vāk identifies herself with the latent forces of the Nature and asserts that it is she who governs the laws of the universe and sends the guardians of the cosmic order to their respective duties of creation and preservation. This hymn is one of the earliest precursors of the non-dual doctrine of the later Vedānta philosophy. This would show that not only the mythology and traditions were taught to women but even the most intricate principles and concepts of metaphysics formed the subjects of their study. Vāk marks the beginning of the line of the brahmavādinīs, who flooded the later Vedic period with their number and philosophical discourses, discussions and speculations.

¹ X. 125.

We have indications in the Ṛgveda strong enough to permit us to conclude that a few of the fine arts formed

Fine arts subjects of women's syllabus of study. It is, however, a fact that many of the fine arts which are now counted in the class had not yet developed. For example, sculpture and painting were perhaps little known and there are but few instances of the Aryan architecture furnished by the Samhitā. Poetry had considerably advanced

Poetry to which the existence of the Ṛgveda itself, being the earliest poetical expression of mankind, points. The hymns dedicated to Uṣā rank among the best pieces of the poetry of all literatures of all times. Since women are credited with their share in the composition of the Ṛgvedic poetry they must also have learnt the elementary rules of prosody, which, though not very advanced, must have existed to render the distinction between prose and poetry possible. The drama had had just a beginning and

Drama the women seem to have had their share to which the dialogues of Yama and Yamī and Urvaśī and Purūravā directly allude. Women may have learnt this performance as well. The earliest forms of drama were these dialogues in which women played their part admirably. The Samanas, merry outdoor festivities of the Aryans, perhaps included also dramatic performances in the form of these dialogues and it is possible that a degenerated state of these Samanas themselves, which had been reborn in the institution of the Mauryan Samājas, may have been the cause of Aśoka's stopping¹ them altogether.

The interest of the Indo-Aryans in music is well evidenced by the existence of the Sāma Veda which deals entirely with the music of the Vedic hymns. Music, besides being an acquisition of the priests, must also have been a necessary equipment of women. Songs were sung on all important occasions and functions, for example at the time of squeezing out the Soma juice. The following verse is a case in point :

“Driving thee in Vivasvān's course, the seven sisters with their hymns
Made melody round thee the sage.”²

Another reference to music is preserved in the passage, “Ten dames have sung to welcome thee, even as a maiden greets her lover.”³ The Apsarases and Gandharvas to whom the later classical literature ascribes the art of music and dancing as a profession have found a mention in the R̥gveda. This we have already noticed elsewhere.⁴ Dancing is a necessary auxiliary to music as an art. Urvaśī and others of her profession must have maintained dancing along with music, for, after all, the profession of courtesans was not unknown to the authors of the Samhitā. We have direct references to female dancers in the R̥gveda. Uṣā has been compared to a female dancer. The female dancer put on peśāmsi and was called *nṛtā*⁵ and while dancing

¹ Rock Edict I.

² समु त्वा धीमिरस्वरन्ध्रिन्वतीः सप्तजामयः ।
त्रिप्रमाजा विवस्वतः ॥ R̥V., IX, 66, 8.

³ अग्नि त्वा योषणो दश जारं न कन्यानूषत । ibid., 56, 8.

⁴ Vide ante.

⁵ R̥V., I. 92, 4.

she kept her bosom uncovered. The following is an interesting verse pointing to the above inference :-

“She like a dancer, puts her embroidered garments on.
As a cow yields her udder so she bares her breast.”¹

This, without doubt, is the picture of a professional dancer.

We have references also to swings (preñkham)² ; and from swinging with music, dancing is but one step. We have no direct evidence of mixed dance, but Kaegi, quoted elsewhere³ , suggests its existence and even asserts that young men taking maidens by the hand whirled about in accompaniment to the sound of the cymbals until the very ground they danced upon vibrated. Music and dancing therefore must also have formed part of the maiden's acquired knowledge, whether for making her an accomplished woman or for aiding her in certain cases in the specialized vocation of a courtesan.

In a foreign land where the Aryans had to fight their foes day and night for every inch of ground it must have been very difficult to advance in the interior with the encumbrance of a household so long as the women could not protect themselves and so long as they hung on the protection of their husbands. Women in such a circumstance would become a burden if they were not trained in self-defence. But the sundry references in the Rgveda show that women, at least in special cases, had the knowledge of the use of the bow and arrow. Sometimes we find them going to dreadful battles along with their husbands. Viśpalā, the wife of king Khela is such an amazon. She, like Kaikeyī of the Rāmāyaṇa, accompanies her lord to the battle-field where she loses her leg which, however, is replaced with an iron one

Military training

¹ अविपेशांसि वपते नृत्तुरिवापोणुति वक्ष उन्नेव वर्जहम् । RV., I. 92, 4.

² ibid., VII. 87, 5 ; 88, 3.

³ Vide ante.

by the Ásvins. This evidence is contained in the following interesting verse :—

“When in the time of night, in Khela’s battle, a leg was severed like a wild bird’s pinion, Straight ye gave Viśpalā a leg of iron that she night move what time the conflict opened.”¹

R̥V., I. 112, 10 furnishes us with a proof of Viśpalā’s being an assailant rather than the assailed. She is reported to be aggressive and seeking booty, though powerless to move. The passage reads, “Wherewith ye helped in battle of a thousands spoils, Viśpalā seeking booty, powerless to move.”² The incident finds repeated mention in the R̥gveda. For example, we read the following: “The quail from her great misery ye delivered and a new leg for Viśpalā provided,”³ Again We have the line, “who....in a moment gave Viśpalā power to move.”⁴

Mudgalānī’s is another case⁵ where a woman is equipped with military training. She was the wife of Mudgala and is credited with having driven the chariot for her husband in battle like Subhadrā of the Mahābhārata. She is mentioned to have conquered her husband’s enemy, who, thus defeated, took to his heels chased by her. The following is the text alluding to it :—

“Loose in the wind the woman’s robe was streaming what time she won a car-load with a thousand.

The charioteer in fight was Mudgalānī: She, Indra’s dart, heaped up the prize of battle.”⁶

¹ चरित्रं हि वरिवाच्छेदि पर्णमाजा खेलस्य परितक्म्यायाम् ।
सद्यो जङ्घामायसीं विक्षलायै धने हिते सतये प्रत्यक्षत्तम् ॥ R̥V., I. 112, 15.

² R̥V., I. 112, 10.

³ ibid., 118, 8.

⁴ ibid., X. 89, 8 ; cf. I. 117, 11.

⁵ रथीरभून्मुद्गलानी ibid., X. 102, 2.

⁶ जतस्म वातो बहति वासो अस्या अधिरथं यदाजयत्सहस्रम् ।
रथीभून्मुद्गलानी गविष्ठी भरे कृतं व्यचेदिन्द्रसेना ॥ ibid.

“In hope of victory that bull was harnessed : Kaśī, the driver, urged him on with shouting.
As he ran swiftly with the car behind him his lifted heels pressed close on Mudgalāni.”¹

Here is a perfect picture of the close pursuit of a conquered Dāsa by an Aryan woman. A few more cases are recorded in the R̥gveda, V. 61; 80, 6; VII. 78, 5 ; VIII. 33, 19; 91.

The aboriginal Dāsas, it would appear, had regular armies recruited from women. We have a verse referring to them : “Women for weapons hath the Dāsa taken. What injuries can his feeble armies do me ?”² Their number in the non-Aryan armies had become so great that it was not thought ungallant to fight them as would follow from the above citation. Even Indra is said to have thrown his bolt upon the mother of Vṛtra, a woman fighting by the side of her son, and killed her.³

Thus we find from the above discussion of the evidence collected from the R̥gveda that the woman in the Indo-Aryan society received a liberal education in almost all the branches of physical and spiritual instruction obtaining at the time. They were, like the later Brahmvādīnīs, even members of the Vidatha, a popular assembly, where (like Sabhā) reciting of verses, ‘singing of holy psalms, telling of the lore of being’ and ‘laying down of the rules of sacrifice’⁴ were perhaps the common features. With Vidatha women are directly connected which they are exhorted at the time of their marriage to address.⁵

¹ RV., X. 102, 8.

² स्त्रियो हि दास आयुधानि चक्रे किं मा करन्नबला अस्य सेनाः । ibid., V. 80, 9.

³ उत्तरा सूरधरः पुत्र आसीद्दानुः शये सहवत्सा न धेनुः ॥ ibid., I. 32, 9.

⁴ ऋचां त्वः पोषमास्ते पुपुष्वात्नायत्रं त्वो गायति शक्वरीषु ।

ब्रह्म त्वो वदति जातविद्यां यज्ञस्य मात्रां वि मीतीत उत त्वः ॥ ibid., X. 71, 11.

⁵ त्वं विदथमा वदासि ॥ ibid., 85, 26.

विदथमा वदाथः ॥ ibid., 27.

CHAPTER VIII

LIBERTY

No wise and far-seeing nation can ever harbour the idea of secluding its women and no nation can hope to attain greatness and prosperity which suppresses the healthy habits of its mothers. The Aryans gave full liberty of outside movement to their women. There is not a single instance in the whole of the R̥gveda to prove a contrary conclusion.

In the R̥gvedic society where the woman was a divine singer and a gifted seer and where she had made a considerable headway in the art of music and dancing and in warfare, her freedom must have been ensured. Learning, being an art attainable by all worthy recipients (adhikārī), defies the principle of aristocracy and its possessor can neither remain concealed from the public gaze nor can bear the insult of being unfree. Many a time the custodian of learning has been the woman in India. Occasionally an amazon—a woman of war—of the national battle-field, she was ever out in the open and could not but come in contact with the rest of the world. The daughters of the freedom loving dwellers of the valleys of the Sindhu and Sarasvatī swung in the plains of the Punjab and on the heights of the Hindukush. The very conception of Uṣā would have been an impossibility and her lovely picture an undrawn sketch had the ṛsis not seen their own free matrons in shining raiments. The free-moving woman of the Aryan household is conspicuously present in her secondary type of Uṣā. It is the beauty of the loving wife in changing robes (to attract her husband) combined with the charm of the professional dancer (nṛtī) with her 'brodered garments on' that makes Uṣā 'melt away the life of mortals, her lovers, like the fowler cutting birds in pieces.'

There was no seclusion of women and the hated purdah of later times was absolutely unknown. Festal meetings attracted women in large numbers. The presence of matrons was considered essential at such gatherings. Some went there in holiday dresses as spectators, others as active participaters in the function in ceremonial costumes. A passage¹ of the Rgveda has the following reference to women proceeding to social festivities in groups : "She decks her beauty shining forth Festal gatherings, with sunbeams, like women trooping to the festal the assembly meeting."² We get a further allusion to it in and the Samana the line : "Like maidens for the gathering they adorned them."³ The presence of women at the popular assemblies was a common feature in the Rgvedic society. A common reference to women attending these assemblies is met with in the following passage : "Along the traces of the Wind they hurry, they come to him as dames to an assembly."⁴ In these gatherings women seated themselves in a row and witnessed and assisted the sacrifice with longing interest and faith in the sacrificial fire as is evidenced by the following line : "Like women at a gathering fair to look on and gently smiling they incline to Agni."⁵ This instance makes it clear that there was no purdah and that the poet saw the gentle smiles of the sitting women.

It seems that Aryan women were quite unlike their Greek sisters in the post-Homeric times, who were forbidden to be present at any banquet. In Greece men preferred to dine by themselves rather than expose their wives to their neighbours' gaze. And in order to defy all possibility of temptation the women were to wrap up every part of their

¹ RV., I. 124, 8.

² व्युच्छन्ती रश्मिभिः सूर्यस्याज्यङ्कक्ते समनगा इव त्राः ॥ ibid.

³ पूर्वीं शिशुं न मातरा रिहाणे समग्रुवो न समनेष्वज्जन् ॥ ibid., VII. 2, 5.

⁴ सम्प्रेरते अन् वातस्य विष्टा ऐनं गच्छति समनं न योषा : । ibid., X. 168, 2.

⁵ अग्निं प्रवन्त समनेव योषाः कल्याण्यः स्मयमानासो अग्निम् । ibid., IV. 58, 8.

bodies. In addition to these external arrangements such stringent laws were passed as might deter the most venturesome.

The popular assemblies to which women flocked and in which they spoke undeterred, were the *Sabhā*¹, *Vidatha*² and the *Samana*³. Of these the first two we have already explained elsewhere and the last we shall have occasion to discuss in the next chapter. Here it may only be added that the Samana was a popular gathering of men and women, mainly grown up boys and girls, where they met and played, loved and parted. Pischel, quoted in the Vedic Index, takes Samana to mean "a general popular festivity, to which women went to enjoy themselves... Young men and elderly women (RV. II. 86, 1; VII. 2, 5) sought there to find a husband and courtesans to make profit of the occasion." Sacrifices, as we have already seen, were another class of festivals at which the presence of women was obligatory. At the bridal feast were beheld maidens approaching it after having decked themselves with gay adornment.⁴ And at the time of the departure of the bride women gave her a grand send-off out of the village. We have a graphic picture of such a scene in the verse quoted below :—

"After thee, courser, come to the car, the bridegroom, the kine come after, and the charm of maidens."

It seems to have been one of the duties of women, especially girls, to bring the Soma plant from the hills for extracting its juice for sacrificial purposes as may be noted from the following passage : "To him, the lord of power, . . as to a hill with speed the loving ones ascend."⁵ Women were so free with men that sometimes we find young girls playing tricks with them. In the R̥gveda, II, 15 7 we have a reference where some girls tease a blind and crippled man who is cured

¹ योषा सभावती RV., I. 167, 8.

² त्वं विदथमा वदासि ॥ ibid., X. 85, 26 ; ibid., 27.

³ ibid., I. 124, 8 ; IV. 58, 8 ; VI. 75, 4 ; VII. 2, 5.

⁴ कन्या इव बह्वुमेतवा उ अञ्ज्यञ्जाना अभि चाकशीमि । ibid., IV. 58, 9.

⁵ पतिं वक्षस्य विदथस्य नू सहो गिरिं न वेना अभिं रोह तेजसा ॥ ibid., I. 56, 2.

of his disease by Indra, who appears at the scene and takes pity upon him. The interesting verse is as follows :—

“Knowing the place wherein the maids were hiding, the outcaste showed himself and stood before them.
The crippled stood erect, the blind beheld them.”¹

In like manner we read of women moving freely in company of their children and lovers. “These meeting like a woman,” says the Ṛṣi, “bear motherlike their children upon their bosom.”² Such references to the outdoor activities of women and to their appointments at trysts³ and festivals⁴ where they even spent their night⁵ may be multiplied endlessly from the Rgveda. They were free to enjoy the company of their lovers⁶.

We have already seen that women were free to choose their husbands and we have cited the instance of Śyāvāśva and Vimada. There was very little control of the parents over their childrens’ marriage. Only brothers had some control over their sister’s marriage but the nature of such control was limited to a kind of supervision. Brothers seem to have advised their sisters in their marriage rather than controlled them. They were only expected to watch that no selfish man had designs over their sisters.⁷ And we learn that brotherless sisters turned boldly towards men and chose their helpmates⁸ from among them with the help of their attractive charms. In fact we have an interesting verse in the Rgveda which calls bhadrā that vadhū alone who, having brilliantly attired, herself selects her husband from an assemblage of men.⁹

¹ स विद्वान् अपगोहं कनीनामविर्भवद्भुदतिष्ठत्परावक् ।

प्रति श्रोणः स्याद्वचनगच्छ सोमस्य ता मद इन्द्रश्चकार ॥ RV., II. 15, 7.

² ते श्राचरन्ती समनेव योषा मातेव पुत्रं विभृतामुपस्ये । ibid., VI. 75, 4.

³ ibid., X. 84, 5 ; 40, 6.

⁴ ibid., IV. 68, 8 ; VI. 75, 4 ; VII. 2, 5, X. 86, 10 ; etc.

⁵ ibid., I. 48, 6 ; VII. 9, 4.

⁶ ibid., III. 81, 7 ; 83, 10 ; IV. 20, 5 ; IX. 96, 20 ; cf. II. 10, 5.

⁷ ibid., IV. 5, 5.

⁸ ibid., I. 124, 4-7.

⁹ भद्रा वधूर्भवति यत्सुपेशाः स्वयं सा मित्रं वनुते जने चित् ॥ ibid., X. 27, 12.

In thought and very often in action women had full liberty. In the foregoing chapters we have seen that there was a good deal of love making among the younger people which could be possible only when there was access to one another. Women in most cases were left alone and checked mildly to love and part. Sometimes we come across cases of an immoral type in the Rġveda (we shall have occasion to discuss them in the following chapter) which must have resulted from a few cases of too free association between the sexes. Such uncontrolled or even partially controlled freedom was bound to result in moral laxities. The very type of marriage called Svayamvara, the self-choice of a husband, could not have been possible in a society of women of obstructed vision. In a community where modest maidens were at liberty to argue out the case of their own marriage¹ and choose their husbands, purdah was absolutely inconceivable. It is true, however, that when women moved outside they perhaps wrapped themselves up in a shawl. This was like the orhni of the present Indian women. In the Rġveda VIII, 17, 7 there is a reference to women dressed in white garments moving slowly 'like the milk which colours the Soma juice.'²

There is, however, a verse which may be supposed by a critic, unfamiliar with the traditions of the Rġveda, to contain a reference to the seclusion of women. It runs as follows :—

“With whom is joined the deftly fashioned ladle, as 't were a lance's butt with gold and adornment,
Like a man's consort moving in seclusion, like talk at gathering or in festal synod.”³

¹ RV., X. 10.

² ibid., VIII. 17, 7.

³ मिम्यक्ष येषु सुधिता वृताची हिरण्यनिर्णिगुपरा न ऋष्टिः ।

गृहा चरन्ती मनुषो न योषा सभावती विदध्येव सं वाक् ॥ ibid., I. 167, 8.

The phrase 'moving in seclusion' (guhā carantī yoṣā) cannot be taken too literally. The word guhā though it qualifies yoṣā has, nevertheless, the sense more of private apartments in a house than of seclusion. With the innumerable references quoted here and elsewhere this verse does not fit well if we interpret it as alluding to the custom of seclusion of women. Other verses make it abundantly clear that there was no seclusion of women at all. In exceptional cases they could be even staked and lost, which fact also points to the same idea. Guhā (secluded), therefore, implies an allusion to the inner apartments of a house. Even to-day the most modern and airy type of residence has its private rooms. After all man needs some privacy. He must have his unguarded moments which require the shield of inner chambers. If we turn to the pages of the laterly Mānasāra we shall find that residences were fitted with inner apartments. So the reference here is not made to seclusion but to the movements of women in the inner chambers and the courtyard of a house. Then it may be remembered that the reference in point is a comparison drawn between a woman moving in the interior of a house like a deftly fashioned ladle covered with gold and adornment and a talk before it is delivered at a gathering in a festal synod. In such a case the allusion is made to the woman moving in the interior of a house as also to an undelivered speech and both these instances are relative, the former to the woman's exit out of the house and the latter to the talk later expressed. The phrase in itself is much too incomplete to yield the sense which we have opposed. If it were not so, how could the R̥gvedic woman be expected to address the Sabhā and the Vidatha and to visit the Samana?

In a land where there was little fear of molestation women were not prevented from going out for the dread of an outrageous assault and were therefore unchecked to go wherever they liked ; as such, the first and foremost reason for seclusion is wanting in the case of the Aryan women and their confinement within doors is consequently a myth. We have evidence in the following line attesting to the safety of roads : "She stayed not for a herald to conduct her, this is the kingdom of a ruler guarded."¹ This makes it clear that busy women ran to and fro unguarded by escorts on the public highways in execution of their errands and their passage was not stayed for want of guards or heralds. It is possible, however, that ladies of rank may have walked under the guard of a splendid retinue. Nor is an instance of an unguarded woman being molested altogether wanting in the Rġveda and we read, although only once, of the Vṛṣākapi assaulting Indrāṇī and of Indra shielding him from the latter's wrath.² Yet this instace itself indirectly proves the woman's free and unguarded movements out of her house.

The position of women in Rġvedic India was to a great extent similar to that in Homeric Athens. In the epoch Homer lived and wrote in, women in Athens were dignified and free. Women there, at least of the upper classes, enjoyed considerable freedom in thought and deed as may be gathered from the evidence of the Iliad and the Odyssey. "There is nothing better or noble," says Ulysses to Nausicæ, "than when husband and wife being of one mind rule a household."³ This position, however, deteriorates during the following ages and by the time we reach what is called the Golden Age of Pericles, women have already fallen to a piteous lot and are nothing short of cloistered slaves. At this stage when we compare the status of the

Aryans with that of the Athenian ones, we are surprised to note that the lives of women at Athens were passed as slaves in a slave State. "When we think of the incredible galaxy of great names, Socrates, Plato, Sophocles, Aeschylus, Euripides, Aristophanes, Pericles, Alci-

¹ न हूताय प्रह्ये तस्य एषा तथा राष्ट्रं गुपितं क्षत्रियस्य ॥ RV., X. 109, 8.

² ibid., 86, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8.

³ Odyssey, VI. 182.

biades, Themistocles, Demosthenes, Herodotus, Aristotle, Thucydides, Praxiteles, Xenophon who lived and flourished within a very few years of one another, who are known, everyone by name at least to every educated person; it is important to remember that those sons of women achieved their eminence at the cost not only of a horde of male slaves, but of the enslavement of the whole female sex." "Plato himself classes together 'children women and servants' precisely as the tenth commandment of the Hebrew and Christian religions classes together one's neighbour's wife, his servants, his ox, his ass and the rest of his property". The Rgvedic women had little in common with these women of Athens.

Egypt gave to her women entirely a contrary status. There women enjoyed even greater liberty than men, and Sophocles had such men in his mind when he wrote: "O true image of the ways of Egypt that they show in their spirit and their life. For there men sit weaving in the house, but the wives go forth to win the daily bread". This reads like a trait of a matriarchal state of society and nothing could be farther from it than the condition of the Rgvedic women who were considered ornaments of the household. They were neither the cloistered slaves like their Athenian sisters nor were they the viragoes of the yard like the Egyptian women. They were free in their movements within and without the house, but they never replaced their men in their outdoor duties. It is the peculiar distinctive feature of the Aryan social structure to demarcate completely the functions of its constituent members, both men and women, and this trait had already made its appearance during the Rgvedic epoch. These functions of men and women were remarkably fused, yet this fusion never gave rise to any confusion as to the respective duties of the sexes, both working in their own spheres. Women were free in their movements but only up to a point within the bounds of civility and modesty.

Indo-Aryan women

Although they did not suffer from any restricting injunctions of the Greek type yet they grew in their habits such healthy conventions as gave them the liberty of action without making them wild and without compromising their dignity.

CHAPTER IX

MORALITY

In a spiritual society morality is viewed as a necessary virtue. The R̥gvedic society was both spiritual and material where liberty of women was recognized and ensured. But it is to be noted that much freedom of intercourse between the opposite sexes and a very high degree of ethics do not well combine in practice. This was what happened in the early Aryan settlement in India. Although the R̥gvedic society is generally noted for its high type of morality yet it has to be admitted that it was at times not entirely free from the incidents of moral laxities. But these were few and far between. The normal state of morality is instanced in the citation below which points out to the fact that ordinarily girls prior to their marriage were entirely ignorant of the sexual experience. The lady R̥ṣi Ghosā, who had grown old in her father's house yearning for a wealthy and powerful husband, prays to the Āśvins, the twin gods :

“Of this we have no knowledge. Tell it forth to us, how the youth rests within the chambers of the bride. Fain would we reach the dwelling of the vigorous steer who loves the time, O Āsvins: this is our desire.”¹

To be born of natural parents was considered proper. Indra himself has been commended as “Law born and Law protector.”² Thus law could be duly protected Normal morality by him alone who himself was an offspring of a lawful wedlock. Indra was the leader and defender of the people in his capacity as a king. He had eclipsed Varuṇa in might and prowess and in kingly virtues and splendour. He has therefore been addressed as 'Law born and Law protector.' Thus the normal state of society was the wedded existence of man and woman loving each other and keeping strict sexual fidelity. A dame, free from all social blonishes was ever dear to her husband¹ and was considered by him the very apple of his eye.

¹ न तस्य विद्य तदुषु प्र बोधत युवा ह यद्युद्यत्याः क्षेति योनिषु ।

प्रियोस्त्रियस्य वृषभस्य रेतिनो गृहं गमेमादिवना तदुश्मसि ॥ RV., X. 40, 11.

² ऋतपा ऋतेजाः ibid., VII. 20, 6.

Lawless unions and sexual transgressions, however, as we have already suggested above, were not altogether wanting in the society for they happen to be the necessary incidents of a free community like the Indo-Aryan which sanctioned free meeting between its men and women. There are a number of references in the Rġveda to lawless unions between man and woman and to the criminal acts resulting from them. We have an interesting instance of it in the following Lawless unions line: "Upholders of law, ye strong Ādityas, remove my sin like her who bears in secret."²

Illegitimate children were thus not unknown to the early Aryan society to which we have a few more instances. A passage³ in the Rġveda refers to the most daring and hateful act of casting away the new-born babe by the erring mother for fear of social ostracism. "Lord of bay steeds," prays the R̥ṣi, "thou broughtest from the anthill the unwedded damsel's son whom ants were eating."⁴ Another verse refers to the same idea:

"So Indra, lord of hundred powers, caused the unwedded damsel's son,
The castaway, to share the lauds."⁵

The hymn X, 62 refers to a sin incurred from destroying the foetus and thus killing the child in the womb and is meant for the purification of it.

¹ भववद्या पति जुष्टेव नारी ॥ RV. I. 87, 8.

² वृत्तवता आदित्या हविरा आरे मत्कर्तं रहसूरिवागः । ibid., II. 29, 1.

³ ibid., IV. 19, 9.

⁴ वज्रीभिः पुत्रमधुवो भदानं निवेशनादरिव आ जमर्थं । ibid.

⁵ उत त्वं पुत्रमधुवः परावृक्तं शतवृत्ततुः
उन्मेष्विन्द्र आमजत् ॥ ibid., 80, 16.

Jāra, paramour, is a common term denoting a lover used frequently in the similes of the Rk Samhitā. The occurrence of this word warrants the existence of love of an unlawful type not permitted by the society.

From the frequency with which this word occurs in the Rgveda we can safely conclude that women enjoyed sometimes too much freedom to be morally safe and chaste. Professor Sarkar observes in this connection that "It is presumed by a domestic ritual formula in the *Rgveda*¹ that every married woman might have her 'jāra'."² This observation, however, is not quite apt and the generalization contained in the remark of the Professor is unwarranted by adequate evidence of the Rgveda.

We give below some of the references contained in the Samhitā alluding to unlicensed love and to paramours. The poet says in a passage: "For me Ṛjāśva like a youthful lover (jāra) hath cut piecemeal one and a hundred weathers."³ In RV., I, 134, 3 the poet wakes up 'intelligence as when a lover (jāra) awakens his sleeping love.'⁴ Another passage makes Indra the lover (jāra) of maidens.⁵ The sun has been imagined as following the dawn like a youthful lover maryo chasing an attractive woman.⁶ We read of lovers enhancing their grace⁷ maryāsrī by affecting attractive costume.⁸ "The virile young man (marya) is normally a lover, constantly in company of youthful maidens (yuvatī)".⁹

¹ RV., X. 162, 5.6 = AV., VIII. 6, 7, 8.

² Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. Hist. of Ind., p. 85.

³ जारः कनीन इव चक्षेदान ऋज्वाश्वः शतमेकं च मेवान् ॥ RV., I. 117, 18.

⁴ प्र बोधया पुरन्धि जार आ ससतीमिव । ibid., 184, 8.

⁵ प्रयन्तमित्यरि जारं कनीनां पश्यामसि तोपनिपद्यमानम् । ibid., 162, 4.

⁶ सूर्यो देवीमुषसं रोचमानां मर्यो न योषामभ्येति पश्चात् । ibid., 115, 2.

⁷ ibid., II. 10, 5.

⁸ मर्यो न शुभ्रस्तन्वं मृजानोज्यो न सुत्वा सनये घनालाम् ibid., IX. 96, 28.

⁹ ibid., III. 81, 7 ; 88, 10 ; IV. 20, 5 ; IX. 96, 20 ; Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. Hist. of Ind., p. 96.

Young women are alluded to have wooed their lovers¹ (jāra). A grown up girl is mentioned as caressing her lover (jāra) in the manner of the fingers pressing the Soma². The lover (marya) puts on bright garments³ to attract notice. A passage has the following: "The cows have sung with joy to him even as a woman to her love" (jāra).⁴ The lover (jāra) is said to have 'sped to his love'.⁵ The enticing lure of the dice is compared to the passion of the love-led girl (jāriṇī) who runs to meet her lover at the rendezvous.⁶ We have a reference to a paramour (jāra) in the following line: "Ten dames have sung to welcome thee, even as a maiden greets her love."⁷ Another passage runs as follows. "So maidens bow before the youthful gallant who comes with love to them who yearn to meet him."⁸ Verse VI, 75,4 has: "These meeting like a woman and her lover bear mother like, their child upon their bosom."⁹ In another verse the poet draws a beautiful comparison between a bow-string and a lady-love:—

"Close to his ear as fain to speak she presses, holding her well loved friend in her embraces.
Strained on the bow, she whispers like a woman, this bow-string that preserves in the combat."¹⁰

In cases where a girl was left both fatherless and brotherless it was her own affair to seek out a husband for herself.

¹ अग्नि गावो अनुषत योषा जारमिव प्रियम् । RV., IX. 82, 5.

² अमित्वा योषणा दश जारं न कन्यानुषत ।

मृज्यसे सोम सातये ॥ ibid., 86, 8.

³ ibid., IX. 96, 20.

⁴ ibid., IX. 82, 5.

⁵ गच्छज्जारो न योषितम् ॥ ibid., 88, 4.

⁶ न्युप्राण्य बभ्रुवो वाचमन्त्र्यो एमीदेषां निष्कृतं जारिणीव ॥ ibid., X. 84, 5.

⁷ ibid., IX. 56, 8.

⁸ ibid., X. 86, 6.

⁹ ते आचरन्ती समनेव योषा मातेव पुत्रं विभृतामुपस्थे । ibid., VI. 75,4.

¹⁰ बभ्रुवन्दीवेदा यनीगन्ति कर्णं प्रियं सखायं परिषस्वजाना ।

योषेव शिञ्जले वितताधि बभ्रुज्या इयं समने पारयन्ती ॥ ibid., VI. 75, 8.

In such a case there was the possibility of her going astray and it is to such a definite fact that a reference is made in IV, 5, 8:—

“Like youthful women without brothers straying, like dames who hate their lords of evil conduct,
They who are full of sin, untrue, unfaithful, they have engendered this abysmal station.”¹

In an interesting hymn² we are told of a lady-love lying half asleep in her house amidst her people expecting her devout lover, while the latter steals into the house after propitiating and invoking gods and praying the watch dogs to sleep,³ awakens⁴ and enjoys her till dawn.⁵ We have references to young girls receiving suitors freely,⁶ to maidens choosing their friends⁷ (mitram) and to kanyās bending themselves to receive the warm embraces of their lovers in the manner of the river offering an easy ford and passage to men.⁸ Indra has been made a frequent and common lover enjoying the company of young women. He is celebrated as a lover proud of his beloved lady⁹ (yoṣā). He is said to be moving with the young dames of heaven.¹⁰ He is lauded with prayers for his strength and vitality. The poet sings of him : “Born master of the life that shall be born, the maiden’s lover and matron’s lord.” He comes as the lord of women to the holy place.¹¹ Again we have such a reference in the following verse:—

Indu hath started forth for Indra’s meeting place, and slights not as a friend the promise of his friend.

¹ अभ्रातरो न योषणो व्यन्तः पतिरिषो न जनयो दुरेवाः ।

² पापासः सन्तो अनृता असत्या इदं पदमजनता गभीरं ॥ RV., IV. 5, 8.

³ ibid., I. 184, 18.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ प्र चक्षय रोदसी वासयोषसः श्रवसे वासयोषसः ॥ ibid.

⁶ ibid., X. 27, 12; cf. 80, 6.

⁷ ibid., X. 27, 12.

⁸ नि ते नंसै पीप्यानेव योषा मययिव कन्या शश्वचै ते । ibid., III. 28, 10.

⁹ मय्यो न योषामभि मन्यमानोऽच्छा विवक्षि पुरुहूतमिन्द्रम् ॥ ibid., IV. 20, 5.

¹⁰ गुहा चरन्तं सखिभिः शिवेभिर्दिवो यद्वीभिर्न गुहा बभूव ॥ ibid., III. 1, 9.

¹¹ नयभूतस्य प्रशिषो नवीयसीः पतिर्जनीनामुप याति निष्कलम् ॥ ibid., IX. 86, 82.

Soma comes onward like a youth with youthful maids and gains the beaker by a course of hundred paths.”¹

The poet has made an enquiry into the secret love of Uṣā. Like her type the Eos of the Greek mythology who is loved by a mortal she is also considered by the Aryan poet to be loving a mortal and hence his curiosity :—

What mortal, O immortal Dawn, enjoyeth thee ?

Where loves thou ?

To whom, O radiant, dost thou go ?

When a woman concedes to prayer the task of her suitor becomes an easy one, for it is almost a part of his nature to be subservient to and complying with the wishes of the woman he adores. At the time of making love the lover is at his weakest point and is prepared to stoop down to the lowest type of undeserved praise for her love. The Aryan psychologist is well aware of it and he hints at the idea in verse I, 83, 2 where he draws a simile from the common life of the people and says, ‘like suitors they delight in him who loveth prayer.’² In another simile the poet shows that people approaching a friend’s sister were censured by the society, but, nevertheless, instances prove that men sometimes did approach them. This is manifest from the following line : “He comes as it were to his friend’s sister roaring.”³ This line, however, does not yield enough sense for a satisfactory interpretation. The creeping in of moral laxity in the society to some extent was natural when polygamy—even polyandry, although in a very few and uncertain cases—was considerably in vogue. More than once a man in the R̥gveda has been made a ‘lord of youthful maidens’ by the benevolent Aśvins, the healing physicians of the firmament who specialize, beside the treatment of the eye, in giving vitality and strength to weaklings or invalid husbands.

¹ प्रो आयासीदिन्दुरिन्द्रस्य निष्कृतं सखा सख्युर्न प्र मिनाति सङ्गिरम् ।

मयं इव युवतिभिः समर्षति सोमः कलशे शतयाम्ना पथा ॥ RV., IX. 86, 16.

² प्राचीदेवासाः प्रणयन्ति देवयुं ब्रह्मप्रियं जोषयन्ते वरा इव ॥ ibid., I. 88, 2.

³ साम कुण्वन्तसामन्मो विपश्चित्क्रन्दन्नेत्यग्नि सख्युर्न जाभिम् ॥ ibid., IX. 96, 22.

Many a time they have been alluded to as giving children to the wives of eunuchs. From the days of the R̥gvedic king Vimada down to the epic figure of Pāṇḍu they are known to be treating the invalid and coming to the rescue of the hard lot of the latter's wives. Pāṇḍu himself, who could not beget a single child and died of the very first union of Mādri, cannot but be considered lacking in vitality, suffering from jaundice withal. Aśvins are friends of such weaklings' wives as Vimada and Pāṇḍu and of girls like Ghṛṣā growing old in their fathers' houses. Verse I, 116, 13 reads :—

“In the great rite the wise dame called Nāsatyas, you lords of many treasures to assist her.

Ye heard the weakling's wife, as't were an order and gave to her a son Hiranyahasta.”¹

Again we get the following :—

“Victors, carborne, ye rent the rock asunder :
bulls heard the calling of the eunuch's consort.”²

Other such references, which can be multiplied innumerably, have already been cited elsewhere.

Many verses can be cited to show that powerful people revelled in wine (Soma beverage) and women to whom the latter must have been an article of luxury. To such men do the verses IV, 5, 5 and II, 35, 5 allude. The latter reads as follows : “The never sullen waters, youthful maidens, carefully decking, wait on him the youthful.” The very next verse,³ difficult to understand and interpret, reads as follows :—

“To him three dames are offering food to feed him, goddesses to the god whom none may injure.
Within the waters hath he pressed as hollow and drinks their milk who now are first made mothers.”

¹ R̥V., I. 116, 13.

² ibid., VI. 62, 7.

³ ibid., 6.

Women have also been accused of stealing looks upon men which is borne out by the line, 'Those who are glancing forth like women, in their way.'¹ We thus find that women were as much guilty as men in making immodest advances at times. The criminals of one sex were amply responded by those of the other. Both were equally abhorred and their acts detested and denounced by the society.

The free mixing of the sexes on the festivals and in popular assemblies gave occasions to young men and women to make friends with each other. These friendships were not always approved by the parents of the parties and where they were so disapproved and opposed by the elders love had not a smooth sailing. Cogent love consequences frequently broke all barriers in such cases and sought redress through elopements. Many a case is on record in which the love-led maiden has made her escape along with her heroic knight in order to shield herself from the chiding elders of the society and frowning parents. Of such allusions those of Vimada and Kamadyu stand out conspicuously.²

The presence of the apsarases among the godly personages of the Rġveda is a clear proof of the existence of courtesans, and even perhaps of prostitutes, in the society. A nr̥hu, compared to the Uṣā and given shining and brodered garments, keeping open her breasts,³ certainly refers to professional dancers who went to fairs and merriments for making acquaintance of false love among the young people. Hymn X, 95 points out to coquetry of the apsarases.⁴ King Purūravā had much to suffer on account of the celestial courtesan Urvaṣī.

¹ RV; I, 112, 19; 116, 1; 117, 90; X, 89 7; 65, 12.

² ibid., I, 92, 4.

³ ibid., X, 95, 9.

⁴ ibid., I, 85, 1.

Adultery among married women was a rare instance in the Indo-Aryan society and the Babylonian type of prostitution was entirely unknown to the times of the Rgveda. In Babylonia prostitution had become almost a religious duty among women and was recognized as such. Herodotus noticed it in his travels. He says that every woman born in the country must sit in the temple of the goddesses and consort with a stranger; the beautiful are soon free but some remain for three or four years. Such a state of affairs could not be imagined in the Rgvedic community.

We shall here make a brief reference to a kind of social institution called the Samana. We have had occasions to refer to this institution at several places in the previous chapters along with other institutions like the Sabhā and the Vidatha. The nature of the Samana has already been explained but here its survey at a little length may not be altogether fruitless. Samana was a social institution which had become very popular among the Indo-Aryans. It was a sort of fair to which both men and women of all ages flocked. It was dominated mainly by people of the younger sort who eagerly awaited its advent. It was a busy centre of amusement and its conspicuous features were frolic, mirth and merriment. By day manly sports like the chariot and horse racing were a common feature whereas by night more tender and absorbing amusements were seen in progress. Dialogues like those of Yama and Yamī and Purūravā and Urvaśī may have been staged in these Samanas. They were beheld in progress all night by fire-light and torches¹ and they dispersed at the approach of the dawn.² By far the most prominent and arresting feature was the quest of suitable matches for men and women. Lovers of both sexes having adorned themselves with diaphanous attires of variegated colours moved to and fro with a view to matrimony.¹ Young auspicious maidens wearing a jovial look and a buoyant countenance² and moving with amorous designs took the very breath of young men away. Mothers often came to the help of these damsels by giving them all help in way of decorating³ their persons and with advice. Even those ladies who had failed to find a husband till old age appeared heavily decked at these *Samanas*⁴ as also perhaps those widows who cared to remarry and return to a state of fresh coverture.⁵ Samanas with their busy programme in progress at the fire-lit night must have resembled in their main features of mirth and merriment the modern exhibitions and carnivals with their various lightful and engaging activities with the only difference that in the latter case the main features of the Samanas, viz. the outside sports of chariot and horse racing and the wooing of lovers, are wanting. Yet the gala appearance at both the festivities was mainly similar.

¹ RV., I. 48, 6.

² ibid., also VII. 9, 4; cf. X. 69, 11.

Professor Sarkar⁶ suggests that Indrāṇī, a sex-goddess, was worshipped at the Samanas according to an ancient custom. This idea is suggested to him by an indirect reference contained in the following verse :—

“From olden time the matron goes to feast and general sacrifice.

Mother of heroes, Indra's queen, the rite's or- dainer is extolled.”⁷

¹ RV., VII. 2, 5.

² ibid., IV. 58, 8.

³ ibid., VII. 2, 5.

⁴ ibid.

⁵ ibid., X. 40, 2.

⁶ Some Asp. of the Ear. Soc. Hist. of Ind., p. 94.

⁷ संहोत्रं स्म पुरा नारी समनं वाव गच्छति ।

वेधा ऋतस्य वारिणीन्वपत्नी महीयते विश्वस्मादिन्द्र उत्तरः ॥ RV., X. 86, 10.

Here we may make a slight historical survey of the Samanas. During R̥gvedic times these were a licensed institution the existence and continuance of which were ensured and encouraged by the elders of the society, themselves taking part in them and sending their sons and daughters to them with a view to finding suitable matches for the purpose of wedding. Thus the institution served a great social need of the Indo-Aryan community by bringing together at the nightly gatherings young men and women. Such meetings naturally could have engendered laxities in the morals of the young folk and the Samanas would have well been viewed with a great disapproval by a later, more conservative, Hindu society. To such a community bound with new formulæ of social civilities, the earlier Samanas must have appeared as shocking and surely their degenerate state made a puritanical Indian emperor attack the institution with much vehemence.

The Samana of the R̥gveda seems to have been the same as the Samajjā of the Aśokan edict of which the objectionable type was stopped by Aśoka. The first of the Fourteen Rock Edicts forbids the holding of the Samajjā in the following words : "Nor should any Samāja be held. For his Sacred and Gracious Majesty sees much objection in such Samāja. But there are also certain varieties of same which are considered commendable by his Sacred and Gracious Majesty."¹ Here we may quote the note made on the word Samāja by Dr. R. K. Mookerji in his Aśoka to elucidate the meaning and features of this institution. It is as follows : "The objectionable kind of Samajjā is described in the Dīgha Nikāya [Vol. iii. p. 188, P. T. S.] as comprising the six features of 'dancing, singing, music, story-telling, cymbals, and tam-tams.'.....Another kind of samajjā is described in the Commentary on Dhammapada [Vol. iv. p. 59, P. T. S.], where it is stated how it was organised by a company of actors (nāṭakā) numbering even 500, who would give yearly or six-monthly performance before the king at Rājagriha for large rewards. These performances would last for seven days, at which the chief feat shown was that of a damsel walking, dancing, and singing on a horizontal bar. The mischief caused by this samajjū was that one of the spectators in the amphitheatre (mañchātimancheṭhita), Uggasena, the son of a rich merchant, fell in love with that performing damsel....

¹ नो पि च सम (ज) कटव बहुक (हि) दोष स (मय) स्वि देवणप्रिये प्रियव्रति रण
(व) खति । अस्ति पिबु एकतिय समये ससुमते । I.R.E. (Shahbazgarhi), Aśoka, p. 222.

In the Vinaya, we read of a samāja held on a hill at Rājagriha with dancing, singing and music [ii. 5, 2, 6], and another for a feast [iv. 87, 1]...

....In the Mahābhārata, the samāja figures as a Śaiva festival [Hopkins, Epic Mythology, pp. 65, 220] accompanied by drinking, song and dance.....

Kauṭilya in one passage [II. 25] refers to utsava, samāja and yātrā, where the drinking of wine was unrestricted for four days, and in another passage [XIII. 5] points out the conqueror's duty of conciliating the conquered people by respecting their national devotion to their country, their religion (deśa-dāivata), and their institutions, viz. their utsava, samāja and vihāra.¹

Samana thus seems to have been a kind of the samāja. It is very probable that it may have degenerated into that kind of the latter institution which had for its features the vocation of fine arts like the music and dancing and which cast a few corrupting influences. The mischief referred to in the commentary on Dhammapada, mentioned above, may have been almost a common feature of the Samana. The kind of Samāja forbidden by Aśoka was the continuance of the Samana which the morality of the succeeding times discountenanced. Samāja itself in still later times degenerated into a very undesirable institution and it is quite in the fitness of things that those that accompany the courtesans in their professional performances and aid their singing and dancing with musical instruments should have been termed as Samājīs in the dialect spoken in the eastern U. P. and Bihar. Samana may have had also some connection with the merry festivities and musical performances held in the month of Śrāvana in honour of Śiva. It is significant that the month of Śrāvana and the musical performances of that month in temple, are called Sāman in the Punjab. The ancient Ṛgvedic Samanas were happy gatherings of young men and women which naturally soon showed signs of moral decay and even during the Ṛgvedic times they must have proved almost hot-beds of immoral associations.

¹ Foot-note, pp. 129-80.

We have already discussed in a previous chapter the customs of polygamy, polyandry and levirate (niyoga). These themselves were not considered objectionable in the Indo-Aryan society but with the change of ethical and moral standards they came to be viewed as unwanted features of marriage. The existence of these, however, does point to a rather questionable standard of morality according to the modern notions.

The children born of illicit love were branded illegitimate and were in many cases exposed to die in the open for fear of ostracism as is borne out by RV., I. 112, 8; II. 13, 12; 15, 17; IV. 19, 9; 30, 16. 19; X. 61, 8; 99, 12.

We have already seen in the chapter on Education that the non-Aryan Indians who fought the Aryans had recruited women soldiers in their army. It was not considered ungallant and unchivalrous on the part of the Aryan warriors to fight women enemies and kill them on the battle-field. Indra cast his thunderbolt even upon Dānu, the mother of Vṛtra. The following verse of the Ṛgveda refers to Indra fighting Dānu and killing her :—

“Then humbled was the strength of Vṛtra’s mother, Indra hath cast his deadly bolt against her. The mother was above, the son was under, and like a cow beside her calf lay Dānu.”¹

A few cynical and uncharitable remarks against women contained in the Ṛgveda have already been referred to above. Nevertheless, they are not so cutting as some of the Christian words that fell from the tongue of the intolerant Tertullian: “You are the devil’s gateway...You are she who persuaded him whom the devil was not valiant enough to attack...On account of you even the son of God had to die.”² And nowhere in the whole range of the Ṛgveda do we come across words such as those uttered by Gregory Thaumaturgus, who says: “A person may find one man chaste among a thousand, but a woman never.” The morality of the Ṛgvedic society therefore was of a high type attended, of course, by the necessary evils incidental to a free, merry and chivalrous society.

¹ नीचावया अभवद्वृत्रपुत्रेन्द्रो मस्या भव वधर्जभार ।

ऋतरा सूरधरः पुत्र मासीद्दानुः शये सहवत्सा न धेनुः ॥ ṚV., I. 82, 9.

² J. L. Davies : A Short History of Women, ch. IV.

CHAPTER X

SUMMARY¹

In the foregoing chapters of this work we have surveyed the position of women during the Ṛgvedic age under various headings, viz. the Transcendent Woman, the Maiden, Marriage, Marriage—its Features, Customs and Usages, the Wife and Mother, Adornment, Education, Liberty, and Morality. We shall now give a short resumé of the contents of these chapters in the following pages and then elucidate comparatively the succeeding stages of women's history in the light of those of other nations. In the end an attempt will be made to find out the needs and requirements of the modern Indian women and to sketch the possible lines of their social and cultural progress.

The Ṛgvedic age saw the zenith of power and influence which the Indo-Aryan woman wielded in her household. She figured so much in the daily life that the Aryan seers, accustomed to think of a man constantly in company with his wife, could not image their gods as lonely. Always do we find the invocations addressed to a god accompanied by his wife, the goddess. "The spirit," says an authority of repute, "of the religion in India intuitive, brooding, waiting, has much of the essential feminine in it." Much of the freedom, rights and aspirations of the Indian women of later times were lost to them, but the very goddesses of the Ṛgveda embody the dream of India's future womanhood and reflect its aspirations. Aditi is the personified freedom, the eternal mother of all beings, who frees men from all their bondage. "Whatever sin we have committed," says the Ṛṣi, "may Aditi sever us from." Indrāṇī is the imperious mistress of the household whose oblations make Indra, her spouse, strong and great. Vāk, the external cosmic energy of the universe, is the omniscient, all-pervading counterpart of the Master of the entire creation, and she aids Him in the administration of His unlimited dominion. Sarasvatī is the patron of fine arts and learning. And that lovely Uṣā, the breath and life of all beings yet the pointer to decay and destruction, is the embodiment of womanhood in all its stages of the maiden, wife and mother. The Ṛṣi loves her as he loves his wife adorned with clothes of variegated colours and he feels attracted by her charming person as one by the winning, intriguing beauty of the female dancer. To her are addressed some of the most impassioned hymns containing the best poetry of the Rgveda. Sūryā is considered even to this day the model for the Hindu bride. The description and imagery of the goddesses were nothing but a reflection of what the seers saw and thought of their own women in their household. It has been said that "Among the early Aryans, the paternal and maternal tie and even the whole family bond was intensely strong. If the father was venerated as the food supplier and protector (Pitā) the mother was beloved as the meter out (mater) of daily nourishment, the arranger of the household, measuring and ordering its affairs as the moon (also called mātā) measured time. To the Aryan family the father and mother were present gods." (Monier Williams: Religious Life and Thought in India). From this picture of the goddesses, the reflected portrait of the Indo-Aryan women, the modern Indian woman can draw her hopes and aspirations and build up a future of real pride and glory.

¹ References to the original text in this chapter are not given as they have already been cited in the previous chapters.

The daughter, who became a curse to the Hindu family of later times, was affectionately caressed and fondled by her parents and brothers who lavished her with presents at the time of her marriage. She was an untiring worker of the Aryan household plaiting mats, weaving cloth, sewing with unbreakable needles, bringing water in jars, squeezing juice from the Soma plant for the purposes of worship, thrashing corn, making fire by friction of sticks, milking the cow, preparing curds and clarified butter, and doing other household work of the kind. She inherited her father's property in her own right in the absence of a brother, enjoyed the right of maintenance in her father's family until her marriage or until death if she chose to remain unmarried all her life, wrested her dowry from her paternal possessions which thus formed her strīdhana, and could give away her ornaments as largesses to Brahmins on the occasion of her marriage. She was free to choose her husband.

The maiden was given away in marriage to her freely chosen match when approved by the parents, or by the brother in their absence. At the time of the nuptial ceremony when the pair took the seven steps together the bridegroom emphatically addressed his bride: "Become thou my partner, as thou hast paced all the seven steps with me. Apart from thee I cannot live. Apart from me do thou not live. We shall live together, sharing alike all goods and power combined." "These words," says Margaret E. Cousins, "repeated now to a childwife, are almost blasphemy, a mockery of the implied conditions of the understanding, capacity and freedom of circumstance of both husband and wife." Mr. A. Mahadeo Sastri, ex-Sate-Librarian of Mysore, commented on the words of the R̥gvedic bridegroom in the following words: "Woman is to be man's comrade in life, his sakhī, with the same range of knowledge and interests, mature in body, mind and understanding, able to enter into a purposeful union on equal terms with a man of equal status, as life-partner, of her own free choice, both dedicating their life work in service to the divine lord of the Universe, both ready to fulfil the purpose of married life from the very day of marriage onwards."

Marriage to-day has in most cases degenerated into a simple sport. In the West man and woman commence with the warmth of romance which does not last long and which ends in many cases as early as they settle down as husband and wife. They are soon exhausted as happy partners of life, for love is a passion and passion has, like a tide, its ebbs and flows. And in the malady which is termed romantic love the paroxysms succeed each other at intervals, always more rapid from the moment the disease declares itself. But by and by the paroxysms are less frequent in proportion as the physical cure approaches, and gradually the feeling cools down. How seriously they rear their imaginary love-edifices only to realize too soon that they hang in the air ! Both are disgusted and lie in wait for the earliest opportunity to run to the divorce court. In this respect the Aryan system admits of no comparison. The Rġveda contains no evidence of divorce obtaining in practice. The very idea was almost abominable. Says Margaret E. Cousins, "Neither must marriage be legalised licence, ruinous to body and soul, wrongly enforced as a duty or a necessity. Such things belong to the reign of the human brute. True marriage is sacred, and divorce is against all occult and spiritual law." The principle of divorce, however, has got to be recognized. There may turn up circumstances in a married life when the dissolution of the marriage alone may be considered the proper course to save a couple from social misery and ultimate destruction and the lead of the European peoples in this regard does deserve a degree of praise. In fact divorce in certain cases was recognized even by the Hindu treatises on the Smiskāras, but cases of its applicability were clearly defined and they arose rarely. To-day in Europe and America there are regular divorce courts to try divorce suits, and every year tens of thousands of such cases are being registered by the legal authorities of the State. The disgrace of this state of affairs is appalling, nay criminal. The boast of a nation, which has divorce courts to its credit or discredit, is simple bragging. It is certainly the very uncivilized state of the brute where the animal in man impelled from sheer sexual impulse casts his impure looks upon any woman that he accosts. The noble mind of the great Roman emperor Augustus revolted against too many divorces in Rome. He warned his people against them and advised them to regard marriage more seriously than they did.

The romantic marriage has utterly failed in countries where it has been tried. It is because pleasure has become the basis of marriage. Religion, which once played such an important part in marriage, is now entirely divorced from it. Set principles, and fixed ideal of life have been lost sight of, and this is the cause of the immense failure of marriage to-day. We cannot define our desires, and wherever we can, we hide them, for they are so commonplace, so trifling, so ignoble. The search of individual pleasure has caught hold of our minds and we cry halt to the endeavours of those noble-minded men who wish to advise us with the wisdom and folly of their experience. 'Hands off' is our challenge to them who make efforts to guide us. The poison of pleasure has infested our ideas and we care more for the time-serving immediate needs of the flesh. George Bernard Shaw has aptly remarked in the Preface to one of his great plays that "There is no subject on which more dangerous nonsense is talked and thought than marriage." Our social institutions are indeed drifting lower and lower everyday towards a crisis. The firm ideal, the fixed standard of conduct for both man and woman that the Aryans, the blessed pioneers of humanity, had, are no more our concern. The Aryans considered their marriage a very serious affair and they sanctified their nuptial with appropriate religious rites. To them it was a life-long arrangement where the husband and wife worked together for a common ideal. They did not unite for simple romance. This was inconceivable. The end was something else and marriage was only a means to that end. Man alone was nothing as the best āśrama was considered to be that of the householder, who united with a better-half to make one single whole of which the later manifestations were Śiva and Pārvatī, Nala and Damayantī, Satyavāna and Sāvitri, Rāma and Sītā.

In a romantic marriage love ceases, romance finishes when the ephemeral physical charms wither away because there the plinth is too insecure. In old age the wrinkled face of a woman married in the romantic manner has little charm with which to entertain the spent up but greedy husband and so fails utterly whereas in the case of the early Aryan old age gave more impetus to the reciprocal sense of conjugal responsibilities. In the absence of bodily charms conjugal duties alone remained, and they grew all the more important. To the Indo-Aryans temporary sexual arrangements would strike too unreal to endure. In the Aryan marriage both the human and the spiritual elements were properly blended. We must not forget that man, after all, is a bundle of weaknesses, an embodiment of feelings and sentiments. Here the companionate system of marriage fails to satisfy us. To work it properly the entire class of human institutions, social as well as political, will have to be revolutionized and refashioned to the very depth of their foundation. We cannot be too much of utilitarians. We cannot act as unconscious limbs of a machine. The process would be too mechanical, the marital bond too frail. Man cannot live alone. He is a dependent being and he must have somebody to care and feel for him particularly in his old age. The Rġvedic Aryan considered marriage a sanctity. To him every incident of marriage had considerable significance. He felt a kind of responsibility implied in his very being. His existence was a sort of heredity which, he conceived, he must pass on to the undying line of his posterity. This notion has been emphasised by a few modern social thinkers as well and we may read in the following sentences of Gasquoine Hartley a beautiful summary of the ideal of marriage. Says she, "We need a new consciousness of our social spirit and racial res-possibilities in marriage, the ideal of handing down at least as much as we have received. We are the guardians of the life force. Let us honour ideals of self-dedication ; of fixed obligations of the one sex to the other, of duties of our children long before they are born, and let us spread the new Romance of love's Responsibility to life ; then there will be in society in general and not in a mere fraction of it, happiness in marriage and passionate parenthood."

Polygamy during the Rgvedic age was only a privilege of the few—the kings, nobles and their priests. Polyandry was not obtaining in the society although a few references to it in the Rgveda would show that there did linger a few cases here and there and that the poet could yet think of it and allude to it. A few cases of levirate are also on record which prove the existence of the custom of Niyoga meant to ease the condition of the society. It was mostly because of this that the widows were absorbed properly in the community and their lot was amply bettered. Monogamous marriages were the general rule and the common people, the viśas, wedded a single wife. Polygamy must have been a legacy from a time of military conditions when most of the additional wives were spoils of war and enslaved aborigines. Vedic culture never countenanced a society where multiplicity of wives became a fashion, as, for instance, among the Arabs or the Jews. Syed Amcer Ali observes, "In the days of ignorance, as the followers of Mohammed speak of the time before the birth of the prophet, the chief feature with regard to woman in Arabia and near districts was the unrestricted polygamy. Among the Arabs woman was a chattel, the integral part of the state of her husband or father ; yet this polygamy was not what is understood in modern days by the term, but rather the patriarchal system of the Israelities. In Persia there was no recognized law of marriage, and in some of the neighbouring countries the custom of plurality of wives assumed some of its most frightful aspects." (Life and Teachings of Mohammed). Among the Jews also polygamy was a prevalent practice and there seems to have been no limit to the number of wives and concubines allowed except the ability to maintain them and their children. Jad Hachasakab said, "A man may marry many wives, even a hundred, either at once or one after another, and his wife cannot prevent it provided that he is able to give to each suitable food, clothing and marriage duty." This state of things could not prevail in the Indo-Aryan community. There the status of the wife was very high. As a bride she was given to the bridgeroom to be the mistress of his household, to look after the slaves and the cattle with kindness, and to lord over her parents-in-law, brothers-in-law and the sisters-in-law. She was identified with the very home. She kept the family fire always kindled, and she ever appeared as a partner of her husband in the sacrifices and other forms of worship. This could be properly realized only if monogamy was the general practice. Incest, whether parental or of the brother and sister, had become a defunct custom during the Rġvedic age. Marriage was performed in many forms which shows that the eight forms of the later times were now beginning to take shape. Thus the Brāhma, Prājāpatya, Gāndharva and Āsura forms had already become a sight.

The Rġvedic woman was at her greatest in her motherhood. Her strength lay in her children. She was not considered a chattel. Slave girls also on several occasions became wives of influential Aryans and could be given and received freely. At times they became mothers of influential personages of the Rġveda. The mother or wife, however, does not seem to have inherited landed property in her own right. She was yet the mistress of her entire household and the omission did not very much offend her. She was brave, noble and virtuous. It has been said of the Spartans that they "wanted strong men: the mothers therefore must be strong. The Spartans wanted brave men: mothers therefore must be brave. The Spartans wanted resolute men, men with decision of character: the mothers must be resolute." This was true with the Aryan mothers as well. "But in Sparta, unlike in India, the softer sentiments associated with motherhood in our eyes were also destroyed by a rigorous discipline, which required each new-born babe to be brought before a committee of hygiene in order to be judged strong enough to live, or weak and therefore fit only for death by exposure." This was absolutely inconceivable in the R̥gvedic community. There the desire for the son was earnest both as a military as well as a religious need, and the daughter was considered the very breath and life of the family. Widows were generally remarried soon after the death of their husbands, and the custom of sati had died out as the existence of the widows would show. Inter-marriages between the Brahmins and the Rājanyas as well as between the Aryans and the non-Aryans were frequent and common. The Indian woman was never greedy of wealth or power. She did not marry her own brother like the Egyptian Nefartari, the daughter of Aah Hetep I. so that the wealth might be perpetuated in the family.

The R̥gvedic woman dressed in woollen and also perhaps in cotton clothes dyed in various colours. There were about four pieces—the upper and the lower garments, the occasional head-dress and the all-covering shawl. The common ornaments that she wore were the necklace, the ear-rings, the armlets, the wristlets, the anklets, and the like. But the use of the nose-ring is conspicuous by its absence. Women wore long hair, oiled and combed it and knit it in long, broad plaits. They applied unguent to the eyes, perfumed their person and used several other items of toilet. The several items of their furniture included their boxes and bed-steads. A particular kind of high bed is associated with them.

The Indo-Aryans gave their women enough liberty of movement. There was no seclusion of women and consequently no purdah and they went unveiled to festive gatherings. A noted fair was the Samana where maidens flocked to make merry and find a husband. They even spent their nights there. They had the right of self-expression and could freely talk of their own marriage. There was rarely any restriction on their free choice of a husband. The discipline of the Athenian women during the post-Homeric days was to be shut up in the house to breed. This was not true of the Rġvedic women although their services as potential, hero-bearing mothers were equally important. The Indo-Aryan woman was never secluded and she would have simply laughed at the words—"A free woman should be bounded by the street"—of a character in one of Menander's plays; and the idea embodied in Thucydides' expression—"That woman is best who is least spoken of among men, whether for good or for evil"—would have sounded ridiculous to her. One of the most important amusements of women was swinging accompanied by songs.

The Indo-Aryans well recognized the truth embodied in the dictum—Ignorance is weakness, knowledge power—and so they prepared their women for power. They taught them music and dancing, the religious lore and the military science. They had among them great women ṛsis like Ghoshā, Apālā, Lopāmudrā, Viśvavārā, Sūryā, Vasukara's wife, mother of the Gaupāyanas, Indrāṇī, Sarparājñī, Mamatā, Yamī and many others. Viśpalā, the warrior wife of King Khela, and Mudgalānī were experts in the art of fighting.

Too much freedom and a high degree of morality do not go hand in hand. Women during the Rġvedic age enjoyed much liberty as a result of which there were bound to appear bad characters in both sexes. There was much of love-making among the younger people and the Samanas were hotbeds of such affairs. Appointments were made and kept. Girls visited trysts and rendezvous where they met their lovers. They even invited them at times in their own chambers at midnight where the lovers stayed until dawn. There was no dearth of illegitimate children who were even deserted and exposed to die for fear of social ostracism. But this very fact shows that the society was severe on those evil-doers. Nevertheless, in spite of the fact that there was much of love-making among the people, the R̥gvedic society set up a high order of morality and there were hardly any instances of adultery among married women. Non-Aryan women joined the army in large numbers and the Aryans did not consider it bad morality to attack and kill these amazons.

It has been rightly pointed out by Langdon-Davies that there was no woman question at Athens because all women were as mere vegetables, and there was no woman question at Sparta because both men and women there were little better than animals. Moreover Sparta, the eugenic paradise and the first and only practitioner of the equality of the sexes, has left literally nothing to posterity but a record of implacable attachment to life, like that of a dog which has its teeth fixed immovably in the neck of an enemy ten times its size. It was not so in India. The social adjustment of the sexes was so perfect that we find no complaint on the part of the woman against the authority of the man. At least never did an Aryan woman cry out in distress in the manner of Medea, who said, "Of all things that have life and sense we women are most wretched, for we are compelled to buy with gold a husband who is also worst of all the master of our person. And on his character, good or bad, our whole fate depends." It has been rightly held that the Greek civilization never succeeded in giving redress to the eternal complaint and that married life and its duties were never the highest Hellenic ideal. Athens, it is aptly pointed out, for all its intellectual grandeur died out, Sparta for all its eugenics became hopelessly degenerate, all that was good and valuable as human experience passed by way of Greek literature to later times and younger civilizations.

Almost all the ancient civilizations have been effaced from the world, India alone has endured the ravages of time and remains alive to this day. She is still living, however weakly, in her continuity and she alone solved her woman problem in the past.

But time is a great factor in the rise and fall, progress and decay of nations. There is some such thing as good and bad time which may of course be so characterized as a result of events, auspicious or ugly. At the close of the Rġvedic period there set in bad times in the history of social India and restrictions were gradually imposed on the freedom of women. Men took upon themselves to think and plan for their women, who henceforth sank into a secondary position where they began to play a second fiddle to their men. The idea of purity of blood caught hold of the Aryan mind and it generally dominated all their activities. Purity of blood as an ethnic principle is a fiction and the admixture of races has been a vigorous common truth. The Gauls and the Huns mixed their blood freely with the high-bred Roman ladies on the banks of the Tiber and the Teutons in innumerable cases lost themselves in the non-Teutonic races. The non-Aryan hordes that raided the rich plains of India were lost in the Aryan social fabric. The later Śakas, Ābhīras, Hūnas and others likewise were enveloped in the Aryan folds and absorbed in the Indian social matrix. And yet the law givers of India in the post Rġvedic period strove and struggled to devise means to keep their blood pure and thus ran after an unrealizable mirage! They prescribed rules for early marriages and banned freedom of women in deed, speech and even thought. They enjoined upon them to identify themselves wholly with their husbands and reduce themselves to nothing in action as well as desires. The Gr̥hyasūtras, the Smṛtis and such other treatises, all sang the same note and completed the ruin of women. Women themselves bowed to these restrictions and accepted them as their only lot. We never read of revolts or murmurs on their part against the grinding misery which the codes enjoined upon them. It is indeed an instance of unprecedented bravery on their part that when they were called upon to identify their life with their husbands' they did so willingly, nay, they even identified their death with theirs. The practice of sati of the primitive times was soon revived and a procession of unfortunate widows, following the bier of a deceased royal husband to immolate themselves on the funeral pyre of the dead, became a common sight. The woman lost her tongue and was struck dumb; the man, the officiating priest, spoke for her: the butcher spoke for the cow!

The Aryan social system degenerated and it enunciated the suicidal policy of child marriage and seclusion of women. Child marriage produced widows and seclusion fear of men on the part of women. This fear, says Cousins in her inimitable style, is a miasma. It is the nadir of degradation in social affairs and remains to this day a slur and a stigma on both sexes. The great R̥gvedic personages like Indrānī, Mudgalānī and Vāk, were forgotten and in their place there stepped in the seemingly high-statured women of the epics reflected in the shadow of their glorious husbands. And then these same were followed by an unbroken crop of pigmy women who could not rear themselves up, could not even lean on the arms of their husbands, but had to be carried. But now this crop is also nearing its reaping time. There is audible the sound of a vigorous reshuffling under the surface of the Indian society and the 'stirrings of a new life are discernible.' The lame has found legs to tread on and the dumb a tongue to express himself. There is a surge of desire for emancipation and an urge for pushing ahead. A mighty wave of freedom has captured the hearts of women all over Asia. Our women have risen in the wake of the West. They have adorned the presidential chairs of legislative bodies and of social conferences and political Congresses. The history of the constitutional world has for the first time been furnished with an example of women directing the affairs of legislatures in the Council Chambers of Madras and the United Provinces. And they have shown that they can equal men in these spheres. Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit has achieved the unique distinction of filling the office of a provincial minister. The successful discharge of the duties attaching to her portfolio has amply justified our trust in her. The excellence of her work has eminently proved her merit and she can to-day easily rank with the best of our men. Tursum Baya and Sarojini Naidu sweep away everything before them. Everywhere our women are shaking off their shackles. Education has generated the promptings of a new life, a desire to work and a sense of sacrifice. But it is here that we need a word of caution.

Caution in our progress has been necessitated because of a very potent reason. We are feeling the influence of the West in our education, in our manner of living and even thinking, as a matter of fact, in everything. In the province of education it is most felt. We are getting both sips of ambrosia as well as dozes of poison. The western method of education has made its point felt in every branch of teaching and learning. It is instilling its own culture through the means of its method, and our women, the newly educated maidens, are imbibing most of its influence, both beneficial and baneful. The former trait, of which the main incidents are a new outlook on life, an open vision, a revolting urge for emancipation and liberty, a sense of equality and justice, a spirit against superstitions, a surge of nationalism, and the like, is to be hailed as auspicious and benevolent. But the latter, with its incidents of artificiality, individual aloofness and personal considerations, egotism, love of the unreal and the superficial, of ultra-modernism and of unrestrained license, is to be discarded as malevolent. In fact, whatever we are importing in our culture we have to weigh and value properly. We cannot stop altogether the influence of the west and it will not be even desirable to do so ; firstly, because while doing so we shall be losing some of the noblest and finest of modern ideas, the critical method and the scientific outlook, which are essentially western, and, secondly, because we shall be an isolated unit in the crowd of nations. We cannot go back to the Vedas, and we cannot at the same time afford to remain isolated in this progressing world. To be isolated to-day is to court death. Our interest lies in the preservation of our best traditions and in welcoming such healthy influences of the West as would prove congenial to our growth. In the field of education our women have made considerable outward progress. This progress is mainly in the nature of a revolt. Revolt is not essentially good or essentially bad in itself. Its merit or demerit has to be judged in the light of the cause to which it is applied. The revolt of the pupil against the beneficent instructions of the teacher, or of the son against the wholesome admonitions of the father is absolutely of the wrong and objectionable type; whereas that against the inequities, unjust and slavish injunctions of the society is exceedingly commendable. Our girls, like our boys, are out for a change and they revolt against everything. They are developing within them a strange sense of values and resent advice or guidance. A peculiar trend of pompous display seems to capture their minds and our modern institutions of education are breeding - in them a feeling of irresponsible ego. They aspire to become the colourful butterfly chased by a number of lost-heads. This has got to go. Tender feelings are indeed some of the most valued possessions of humanity but the failing weakness or the helpless imbecility can never be adjudged as lasting qualities whether in men or in women. Physical charms and attractions are becoming the daily concern of our young women: slimness in body they seem to view now as their strength and pride and roundness of features as their weakness and despair. They seem to consider that their strength lies in their weakness and that they should seem to wither with the touch. But this is not desired of our girls. They are expected instead to imbibe the real feminine virtues and grow into the heroic women of yore. They have to grow within them that impressive, proud and distinctive individuality which will make its impress felt on men and quieten their restlessness. This individuality will be well-fused in that of the man's, nevertheless, it will remain distinct from his. She will not let him peep too much into her and will endeavour to keep in fact the enigmatic character of her sex so that man may not grow out of her, so that he may not get fed up and fatigued, and may not sicken and die for want of that care and affection which sustain and strengthen him without disclosing to him the full capacity of the undrying source of the fountain and the ever moistening and tendering Hippocrene.

It is not proposed to lead here a crusade against the use of the aids to beauty. Our women may have, if they so desire, all the heaps of wonderful things that are found arranged in a toilet shop—scent-bottles, powders, pots of perfume, odoriferous pastilles, phials, washes and all those accessories which are requisite ere beauty can be made perfect. What is urged to be avoided is the change of our women, the very pictures of health and freshness, into slim ladies of the hard sexless stamp of the cultured female. What is wanted of them is that they should develop vigorous womanhood endowed with the winning charms of nature. Such women can never be appendages to their husbands and will defend themselves, when needed, against a hundred odds. That type of education must be evolved which, besides giving the woman a knowledge of the languages and literatures and of the sciences, further endows her with a character. She has got to be resolute, brave and intrepid. She must be prepared to 'ride in the whirl wind and direct the storm', and, if need be, to dare and die. The type of education that is being imparted to her is undoubtedly faulty and lacking in many things. In several cases it creates in the modern girl an aptitude to become unnecessarily conspicuous. Gandhi was perfectly right when he characterized the modern girl as playing a Juliet to half a dozen Romeos. Co-education also is to some extent the cause of developing such a frame of mind. But co-education cannot be relinquished as there are more virtues than vices in it. We have neither the funds nor the will to stop it. It will undoubtedly engender a degree laxity in the morals of our boys and girls but we have got to brave it all. And we shall have even to revise to some extent our definition of chastity and to broaden its narrowness. In fact, the definition of chastity has had to undergo several changes even in the past. There was a time, for example, when the very touch or even the shadow of another man was considered enough to defile the purity of a married woman. Such chastity can hardly be an object of pride with the people of to-day. A certain degree of laxity in the morals is incidental to every society where free mixing of men and women and co-education are in vogue. It was so in the R̥gvedic society also. Thus we shall have to choose the lesser evil and earnestly strive for making co-education a success. Here is provided an opportunity for the young men and women to make an acquaintance with each other which raises the curtain for a while on both sides and lessens their enigmatic character, which otherwise proves an unsatisfied curiosity. And an insatiated curiosity, when accentuated, breeds many an evil and that at a time when it is impossible to hold back the curious, whether man or woman.

Women have suffered in India, as in the western countries also until very recently, in many ways. But the most arresting feature of this suffering has been the neglect of her right of inheritance in the paternal property. She has been considered an appendage of man. This continues to be even now her lot and it indeed reflects on the sense of honesty of our men. In the common Indian family there is a tremendous difference in the degrees of care taken of the boy and of the girl. The girl is a poor, neglected creature while the boy is 'the master of all he surveys.' The educated sensible families are doing much for ameliorating her condition but ordinarily her fate is woeful. Such is also the case of married women. It is possible that spread of education and sense of equity and honesty on the part of men and the call for justice on that of women will do a little good, nevertheless, it will not carry them far and we shall have to take the aid of legislature in this direction. The lines in this respect will have to be followed mostly as suggested by Dr. A. S. Altekar in his recent invaluable work entitled the Position of Women in Hindu Civilisation. Legal rights making them lawful owners of immovable property will have to be conferred on women. By now what they have had is the right of maintenance in the paternal family until they are married and restricted ownership in the husband's landed property. Their right in their father's property will have to be recognized.

But the nature of the woman's right in her ancestral property requires a careful discussion. It is generally held by some of the enthusiasts working in the cause of women that daughters should have equal right with the brothers in the ancestral property. This is not to be as it will prove inequitable and unjust with regard to the sons in the family. The daughter in the long run does not normally belong to the family as she enters another after her marriage. If the rights of the wife in the movable and immovable property of her husband are properly recognized by the law of the land the hardship in case of the daughter in her father's family will become greatly mitigated and the seeming wrongs mostly redressed. And since, according to this scheme, she inherits property in her own right in her husband's family she will thus be placed on a more advantageous footing than her brothers, who will receive their apportioned shares only in the father's family. Thus while she inherits in two families her brothers inherit in only one. This will indeed be unjust. Therefore here we must act on a saner principle. The daughter should be given as much care in her father's family as her brother gets, and the same amount of money should be spent on her as on her brother, of course according to the exigencies of the nature of her education. She should get her maintenance until she marries. But if she chooses to remain unmarried all her life she may get either an allowance or a share in the ancestral property equal to that of the brother. Special consideration to some extent for the son of the family will have to be made as he is expected to marry and have children. The daughter, as usual, will receive a dowry at the time of marriage proportionate to the means of her father's property. There remains yet another point to be discussed in this regard. The maternal grandfather's property is inherited by the daughter's son and not by the daughter's daughter in the former's presence. This must change. Here, since property is devolving on them from a different outside source, an equal share should be given to each. There is no chance of any further advantage to either over the other as both have their right of inheritance, besides this, elsewhere, i. e. the son in his father's family and the daughter in her husband's family when she marries. There may be some religious difficulty as the inheritance of the maternal grandfather's property by the daughter's son is not meant only as a means of devolution of property but also seeks to find a son to the grandfather who would offer oblations to him after his death and to his manes. This latter function the daughter's daughter cannot perform. But this will have to be brushed aside, for, after all, there is no remedy when a father dies without leaving a son and when the family becomes extinct. In case of the family becoming extinct the only idea that remains is one of the devolution of property. And property can never remain unowned. Therefore in the present case also the family of the maternal grandfather may be taken to have become extinct and the daughter's daughter be given an equal share with the daughter's son.

The franchise having been widened, our women have entered the field of active public life and have come to shoulder the responsibilities of administration. With the working of the adult suffrage they are expected to gain further ground. Still there remain several disabilities which debar them from taking to public service and to government offices. These bars, it is time, were lifted. This can be effected by statute law.

Child marriages must now be stopped with a strong hand. The Sarda Act should have gone a long way in this regard but it has not gained much ground due to the apathy of the people and due to the fact that the child marriage being a non-cognizable offence the police cannot take steps in the matter. And the Act has become utterly ineffective. Hundreds of such marriages, it is supposed, are contracted in the land despite the existence and operation of this Act. The Act can become effective only when the Government makes child marriage a cognizable offence. In like manner polygamy will have to be altogether suppressed by law. It should be allowed only in certain very clear cases where the living wife has been declared medically unfit for the act of procreation or has absolutely become disabled by disease. Divorce also has got to be introduced but the application of law pertaining to it will have to be very stringently and carefully made otherwise we shall be constrained to run the nefarious divorce courts the existence of which they deplore in America. Divorce is verily an evil, although a necessary one.

We must remember, as it has been already pointed out, that the West has entered our soul and that it has come to stay with us in our life, in our thought, and in our institutions. But the wave is strong; it may drown us. We must rise and stem its tide. Yet we cannot afford to neglect it for it has proved in several points very fruitful to us. We must then cut small channels to receive the amount of water we require. We can not possibly stop the wave. It is bound to come. What is desirable is to become wiser by the wisdom and folly of the West. We have to see that we do not repeat those blunders which the West has committed and which it declares as such. Only the achievements of the West should be ours.

Respect for women is a necessary trait of a rising nation. We are learning it no doubt, but we are learning it slowly. We must realize that the mother is the generator of man and she deserves to be greatly honoured. It has been aptly held that unless our nation 'learns to respect and treat properly the mothers of the future, all talk about motherland is cant and self-illusion.' The future lies in the hand of our women, our mothers, but we must not hinder their progress and act as impediments in their way by our short-sighted perverseness. They must be given all the freedom they need. As a matter of fact, we have no right to keep them in fetters. We have been their goalers by now: we must now throw away the keys, shatter the irons on their feet and demolish the prison, and then alone can we hope to rise. Our women are our hope.

It will not be out of place to quote here the noble exhortation of that great worker in the cause of India and her women, Margaret E. Cousins. "Ignorance makes slaves;" says she, "Slave mothers produce craven children. The ignorance and enslaved conditions of later Roman motherhood brought about the fall of the great Roman Empire. There is a western saying, 'Educate that you may be free'. Foremost, then, among the race regenerators and nation builders will be those large minded persons who work for the education of women....." "Let neither sex arrogate to itself that divine right of restriction," she continues, "but let freedom and equal opportunity, mutual encouragement, respect and recognition form the foundations of a new era of comradeship of men and women in the land sacred with the memory of heroes and heroines. Then only will India realise the value of the gifts her women can bring to her altar, and the impoverishment of national life that is now taking place owing to the false conditions under which they have to live—conditions so bad that instinctively no man wants to be reborn a woman; and woman herself deprecates or is ignorant of her own value acquiesces in wrong ideas of herself as 'temptress,' 'unclean' and 'secondary,' instead of realising the honour and responsibility that are given to her by the Creator." (The Revolt of Asian Womanhood)

Let the Indian woman rise and declare to the mankind in the words of Chitrā, the great creation of Dr. Rabindranath Tagore :

"I am Chitra. No goddess to be worshipped nor yet the object of common pity to be brushed aside like a moth with indifference. If you deign to keep me by your side in the path of danger and daring, if you allow me to share the great duties of your life, then you will know my true self."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

VEDIC TEXTS

1. R̥gveda (Ajmer Edition)
2. Yajurveda
3. Atharva Veda
4. Vājasaneyi Samhitā
5. Taittirīya Samhitā
6. Aitareya Brāhmaṇa
7. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa
8. Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa
9. Kaṭhopaniṣad
10. Bṛhaddevatā

EPICS

11. Rāmāyaṇa
12. Mahābhārata

SŪTRAS AND SMṚTIS

13. Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtras
14. Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtras
15. Vāsiṣṭha Dharma Sūtras
16. Pārashara Gṛhya Sūtras
17. Kauṣītaki Sūtras
18. Vātsyāyana Kāma Sūtras
19. Manusmṛiti

BUDDHIST LITERATURE

20. Vinayapitaka
21. Dhammapada
22. Dighanikāya
23. Jātakas

POLITY

24. Kauṣītīya Arthaśāstra

ARCHITECTURE

25. Mānasāra

PURĀṆAS

26. Vāyu Purāṇa
27. Matsya Purāṇa
28. Brāhma Purāṇa
29. Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa
30. Kūrma Purāṇa

81. Līṅga Purāṇa

82. Harivaṁśa

KĀVYAS

83. KĀLIDĀSA : Abhijñāna Śākuntala

84. Vikramorvaśī

85. Raghuvamśa

86. Meghadūta

87. Kumārasambhava

(Indian Texts) TRANSLATIONS

88. T. H. GRIFFITH : The Hymns of the Rigveda

89. H. H. WILSON : Rig-Veda, Volumes I-VI

40. MAX MÜLLER : Rgveda Saṃhitā

41. Vedic Hymns, SBE., 32

42. COWELL : Jātakas

43. R. SHAMA SASTRY : Arthaśāstra

TRANSLATIONS (Foreign Texts)

44. The Avesta

45. MUHAMMAD ALI : The Quoran

46. Iliad

47. Odyssey

48. The Bible

49. The Republic of Plato

50. CARTER : Moral Discourses by Epictatus

51. LIVY : History of Rome

MODERN WORKS

52. SIR S. RADHAKRISHNAN : Indian Philosophy, Vol. I

53. A. A. MACDONELL : Vedic Mythology

54. A History of Sanskrit Literature

55. A. A. MACDONELL & A. B. KEITH : Vedic Index, Vols. I & II

56. MAX MÜLLER : India, What it can teach us

57. Lectures on the Science of Language

58. History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature

59. MUIR : O. S. Texts, Vol. V

60. OLDENBERG : Die Religion des Veda

61. FISCHER : Vedische Studien, Vol. 2

62. HARDY : Vedische-Brahmanische Periode

63. KÜHN : Entwicklungstufen

64. KARGI : The Rigveda

65. WALLIS : Cosmology of the Rigveda

66. MONIER WILLIAMS : Religious Life and Thought in India

67. WINTERNITZ : History of Indian Literature, Vol. I
68. ROGOZIN : Vedic India
69. A. C. DAS : Rigvedic Culture
70. R. K. MOOKERJI : Asoka
71. Nationalism in Hindu Culture
72. CLARISSE BADER : Women in Ancient India
73. S. C. SARKAR : Some Aspects of the Earliest Social History of India
74. BIMALA CHARN LAW : Women in Buddhist Literature
75. A. S. ALTHEKAR : The Position of Women in Hindu Civilisation
76. P. K. ACHARYA : A Dictionary of Hindu Architecture
77. J. LANGDON-DAVIES : A Short History of Women
78. SYED AMBER ALI : Life and Teachings of Mohammed
79. MARGARET E. COUSINS : The Revolt of Asian Womanhood
80. C. GASQUIONNE HARTLEY : Women, Children, Love and Marriage
81. SIR JAMES FRAZER : Totemism and Exogamy
82. JAMES V. HOSMER : The Jews
83. J. P. MAHAFFY : Social Life in Greece from Homer to Menander
84. J. W. MACKAIL : Select Epigrams from the Greek Anthology
85. MOLLER : History of the Christian Church (Trans. by A. Rutherford)
86. A. BUTLER : Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs and other Principal Saints
87. V. S. AGRAWALA : Mathura Terracottas
88. TENNYSON : Tithonus
89. RABINDRANATH TAGORE : Chitra
90. OSCAR WILDE : An Ideal Husband
91. G. B. SHAW : Getting Married
92. B. S. UPADHYA : Women in Rgveda, First Edition
93. Transactions of the Ninth Oriental Conference

JOURNALS

94. Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. XVIII. 1852
95. Journal of the American Oriental Society
96. Journal of the Benares Hindu University, Vol. I. Part 2
97. Illustrated Weekly of India, July-November, 1935

INDEX

A

Aah Hotep I	215
Abhijñāna Śākuntala	70, 71, 159
Ābhīras	218
Acchodā	123
Acharya	171n
actors	204
adhivāsa	161, 162
adhivikartanam	87
Aditi	3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 91, 145, 154, 207
Ādityas	3, 4, 5, 8, 194
Adultery	217
Aeschylus	190
Agrawala, V. S.	25n
Agastya	27, 176
Agha	76
Agni	5, 6, 13, 17, 18, 23, 24, 26, 31, 82, 51, 77, 78, 81, 82, 85, 86, 102, 114, 129, 183, 184, 186, 185
Agnyāni	28
Aikṣvāki	124
Aitareya Brāhmaṇa	10, 33
Ajātasatru	125
Akkad	42
Akṣayāśva	123
Alcibiades	160
Alexander	191
Algonquins	23
Altekar, A. S. Dr.	148, 149, 161, 167, 224
Amāvasu Aila	123
Āmbhṛga	21, 178
America	200
Āṅga	123
Āṅgiras	62
Āṅgirasas	123
Āṅgiras Kutsa	136
Ankhesneferabna	146
anudeyi	69
amṛta	11
anklets	167, 215
anukramaṇi	114, 176
Anuloma	55, 62
Anumati	26
Apālā	176, 216
Āpri	23, 24, 30
Apsaras	30, 86, 154, 169, 180, 200
Arabs	34, 127, 213
Aramati	26, 27

Aranyāni	27, 169
Aristophanes	190
Aristotle	191
armlets	167
Ārjikiyā
Arjuna	71
Arundhati	89, 134
Aryans	1, 2, 4, 8, 9, 13, 16, 18, 27, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 38, 56, 63, 64, 68, 73, 89, 92, 98
Aryan Architecture	179
—family	186
—psychologists	193
Aryaman	8, 31, 32, 34, 102, 151
Asaṅga	62
āsasanam	87
Asia	98, 219
Asikni	23
Asoka	180, 208, 204
Assam	24
Asumati	26
Āśvalāyana Śrautasūtra	64
Āśramas	180, 211
Asuras	66
Asura (Marriage)	214
Āśvins	17, 18, 20, 49, 54, 61, 70, 74, 76, 77, 91, 95, 100, 112, 113, 114, 143, 169, 176, 182, 193, 198, 199
Ātharva Veda	4, 9, 33, 39, 49, 62, 63, 86, 95, 96, 97, 98, 117, 162, 163, 164, 170, 172, 175
Athens	175
Athonian	41, 213, 217
Atka	162
Augustus	211
Aufrecht	163
Āusija	63, 73, 109, 110, 149
Āvesta	27

B

Bandhu	177
bangles	167
Benares Hindu University	136n
bhadrā	187
Bhaga	17, 31, 34, 102, 151
Bharatas	24
Bharata	123
Bhārati	22, 23, 24, 30, 32
Bhartṛhari	39
Bhojapuri	172

Bhrātṛ	86, 46	Damayanti	212
Bihar	172	dāna	67
Bimbisāra	125	dancer	14, 184, 208
Bimala Charn Law	125	dancing	180, 181, 204, 205
Bloomfield	24	Dānū	31, 156, 205, 206
Brahma	87, 177	Darbha	48, 56, 58, 59
Brahmavādinis	179, 188	Daśaratha	126
Brāhma	214	Daśaratha-Jātaka	124
Brāhmaṇas	55, 56, 81, 85, 98	Dāsa	1, 68, 92, 188
Brahmin Priests	80	Dasyus	1, 92
Brahmins	87, 59, 158, 215	daughter	4, 88, 128
Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa	124	Davies, J. L.	206
Brahmāvarta	24	Dawn	6, 12, 15, 24
Brhaddivā	25	Dolbruck	85, 86
Britain	22	Demeter	28n
British	108	Demosthenes	191
brother-in-law	101	Deṣṭri	88, 181
Bhāvya	54, 60, 62, 149, 176	devara	101
Bhāvayavya	62, 68	devī	128
Buddhist Jātakas	118	devṛkāmā	100, 101, 115
burial	95	Devayāni	62, 128
C
Chalcolithic civilization	42	Dhammapada	204
Chalcolithic Age	160	Dhammapada Commentary	208
chastity	228	Dhātār	181
chattel	218, 214	Dhātṛ	88
Child Marriage	219	Dhigāṇā	26, 82
Christ	1, 41, 48	Dictionary of Hindu Architecture	171
Christian Religion	191	Digha Nikāya	208
Chitra	228	Dirghatamas	41
civilization	1	Diti	8
Clarisse Bader	9n, 24n, 58n, 144	Divodāsa	29
classical literature	180	Divorce	210, 226
co-education	228, 226	Domestic happiness	180
Colinet	7	Dowry	87, 65, 67, 68, 69, 74, 77, 146, 148, 171, 172, 209, 224
Combyes	146	Drama	179
Conjugal	189	Dramatic literature	178
Contractual	65	Dramatic performance	180
Contractual marriage	65	Drāpi	161, 162, 168, 165
Consummation of marriage	84	Draupadi	116
Cosmology of the Rgveda	7	Dress	156
Council Chambers of Madras and the United Provinces	220	Material of cloth	157
Courtesan	18, 181, 186, 200, 205	—skin	157
Cowell, Jātakas	124	—wool	159
co-wife	105, 107	—cotton	160, 215
Cyavāna	56, 109	Articles	161
Cybele	9	Brocades	164
D
dakṣiṇā	80	Stitched clothes	165
dampatī	26, 27	Dṛṣadvatī	28, 80, 128
		Druids	22
		Drupada	124
		duhitā	84
		Duṣyanta	71
		Dutch	108
		Dvija	180

dvi-jāniḥ	104	Gaupāyanas	177, 216
Dyaks	28n	Ghoṣā	49, 54, 60, 63, 118, 176, 193, 199, 216
Dyāvā	5, 9	Ghaghra	165
Dyāvā-bhūmī	10	Gārhapatyāya	102
Dyāvā-Kṣāmā	10	Golden age	190
Dyāvā-Pṛthivī	10	Gomatī	28
Dyans	6, 17, 31	Goyūthikam	116
E		gṛhapati	138
ear-rings	167, 215	gṛhapatnī	138
East India Company	108	G, hyasūtras	218
Earth	7, 8, 11	G, hya Sūtra (Pāraskara)	11
Egypt	42, 126, 191	Greece	28, 185
Egyptians	8	Greeks	9
Egyptian Dynasty	2	Grecian civilization	2
—Woman	146	Greek civilization	217
Elam	42	—literature	217
Elopements	200	—mythology	198
Eos	12, 198	Gregory Thaumaturgus	206
epics	26, 219	Griffith	76, 78, 107, 163, 164, 173
epic mythology	204	Gangū	25
ethnic principles	218	H
eugenics	217	Hachasakab	214
Euripides	190	Hali	99
Europe	98, 210	Haimavatī	123
Exposure of illegitimate children	205	Hair-coiffure	168
Exogamous	118	Harappa	42
F		Hardy	7
Factum Valet	71	Harivamśa Purāṇa	124
Female-slaves	78, 149, 150	Harmya	171
Festal gathering and Assembly	185	Hartley G.	47, 212
Fine arts	174, 175, 179, 204, 208	Hebrews	127, 191
Footwear	165	Hebrew Religion	191
Franchise	226	Hebrew writings	2
Freedom	89, 45	Hellenic Ideal	217
French	103	Herodotus	98, 201
Furniture	170	Hindu	17, 89, 136, 171
Funeral	91	—Community	67, 187
Funeral hymn	92	—husband	187
Funeral rites	94	—sculpture	167
G		Hindukush	90, 184
Gā	123	Hippocrane	232
Gambler's hymn	48, 140	Hiraṇya-drāpi	164
Gandhāras	61, 159, 180, 176	Hiraṇyahasta	54, 100, 199
Gāndharva	80, 51, 69, 70, 71, 82, 85, 86, 114, 180, 214	Hiraṇyapēśas	164
Gandhi, M. K.	228	Homer	190
Gaṅgā	28	Homeric Athens	190
Gāthā	83	—hymns	9
Gauls	217	Honeymoon	89
		Hopkin	204
		Hotrā	24, 32
		Huns	103, 213
		House-wife	4

I	K
Ilā 22, 24, 25	Kaegi 46, 97, 181
Illegitimate children 217	Kaikiyī 181
Illiad 190	Kakṣivān 53, 54, 56, 60, 61, 62, 68, 68, 78, 109, 149, 176
Illustrated Weekly of India 125	Kakṣivān-Pajriya 148
Incest 90, 112, 118, 122, 128, 214	Kalidāsa 81, 85, 47, 66, 71, 78, 108, 186, 147, 169, 171
Incestuous marriage 116, 126	Kamadyu 58, 70, 71, 100
Indian Adam and Eve 117	Kāmāyanī 177
—Culture 47	Kaṇva 159
—Eos 12	kanā 51
—social matrix 218	kanyā 51, 197
Indian Philosophy 2	knayā-dānu 67
—Women 99, 207, 208	kanyanā 51
Indo-Aryan 1, 44, 98, 108, 175, 180, 189, 194, 201, 208, 212, 215, 216	kanīnakū 51
—community 47	Kashmir 160
—society 160, 200, 205	Kāśī 125, 188
—women 170, 191	Kaśyapa 128
Indo-European 1	Kauśalyā 184
Indo-European age 97	Kaṇṭilya 204
Indo-Germanic race 98	Kavaṣa 68, 78, 109, 110, 149
Indo-Iranian period 27	Kayana 28n
Indra 8, 20, 81, 82, 79, 88, 91, 102, 104, 105, 106, 118, 180, 182, 184, 189, 148, 145, 150, 153, 177, 182, 187, 190, 198, 194, 195, 197, 205, 207	Khela 148, 181, 182, 216
Indra's Mother 177	Kṣatriya 59, 98, 125, 175
Indrāṇī 20, 81, 105, 106, 180, 182, 148, 144, 177, 190, 202, 216, 219	Khyrim 28n
Indu 197	Kildare 28n
Indus Valley 42	Kiṁśuka 77
Indus-Valley civilization 160	kos 172
Inter-marriages 68, 64, 215	koṣa 171
Israelities 218	Kosala 125
Ireland 28	Kosalā-devī 125
J	L
janayah 104	Kṛṣṇa 71, 91, 124
janitrā 10	Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana Vyāsa 124
jāra 195, 196	Kṛṣṇāśva 128
jāriṇī 196	Krumu 28
Jātaka 124	kṣonibhiḥ 108
Jelous Wife's Spell 105, 177	Kubhā 28
Jews 218, 214	Kühn: Entwicklungslufen 16
Journal of the Benares Hindu University 126	Kumārila 127
Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society 2	Kuyava 109
Juhā 177
	Langdon-Davies 217
	Language 175
	Lawless union 194
	Lecture on the Science of Language
	M. Müller 117
	levirate 205, 218
	Life and Teaching of Mohammad by Ameer Ali 218, 214
	Literature 175
	Lopāmudrā 27, 176, 216
	Lover 17

M
Maat	8	mitram	197
Macdonell, A. A.	8, 10, 12, 16, 24, 26, 27, 31, 85, 96, 138	modern Indian ladies	161
Mādri	199	Hindu bride	172
Maghā	76	Mohen-Jo-Daro	42, 160
Maghavan	129	Moghuls	103
Mahābhārata	41, 43, 71, 123, 124, 132, 204	Mohammad	84, 213
Mahākosala	125	mohurs	166
Mahārāṣṭra	125	moon	17, 78
Māhi	24	Monier Williams	203
Mamatā	177, 216	Monogamy	90, 101, 111
Mānasāra	171, 189	Monogamous marriage	213
Māndhātṛ	123	Mookerji, R. K., Dr.	9, 203
Manu	23, 123, 144, 147	Morality, normal	193
Manusmṛti	65	mother	4, 144
Cousins, Margaret E.	209, 210, 219	Mudgala	182
Marriage	17, 41, 42, 48, 49, 55, 56, 57, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 74, 76, 78, 79, 81, 87, 88, 90, 94, 97, 109, 111, 115, 125, 126, 148, 149, 167, 174, 175, 183, 187, 188, 205, 209, 210, 211, 212, 214, 216, 224, 226	Mudgalini	182, 183, 216, 219
Marriage Ceremony	79	Vasa	162, 182
Marriage hymn	50	mudrā	27
Marital rites	83	Muir	163
Mrudvṛdhā	28	Musio	176, 181, 204
Marut	6, 27, 112, 113, 114, 133, 153, 164, 166	mythology	174, 179
Max Müller	6, 79, 117, 127
maryāśrī	195	N
maryo	195, 196	Nāgaraka	169
mātṛ	144	Nahūṣa-Aila	123
mātarā	144	Naidu, Mrs. Sarojini	220
mātā-pitarāḥ	144	Naktośāsā	17
mātarā-pitarā	144	Nala	212
Mātariśvan	83, 131	Narmadā	123
Matrarchal state	191	Nārāśamsi	77
Mātula-kanyā	125	Nāsatyas	199
Mahiṣi	108	Nature	2, 17
Medea	217	Naqil	167
Meghadūta	59	Nausicae	190
Mehta, V. N.	99, 167	necklace	215
Menander	216	Nefartari (Egyptian)	215
metaphysics	135, 179	Neṣtar	32
Metronymic	115	Night	17
Military science	174, 175	Nile	42
Training	182	niṣka	166
Minerva	2, 23	nivī	162
Mitākṣarā Law	39	Niyoga	99, 100, 115, 205, 213
Mitra	8, 119	nose-ring	205
Mitrā-Varuṇa	23	Nirṛti	26
		nṛtu	161, 165, 180, 184, 200
		nuptial rites	98, 109, 209
		N. W. Province	165
		Odyssey	190
		oḥni	163
		ornaments	165, 209, 215
		Oscar Wilde	33
		Oldenberg	7

- P
- Pāṇḍavas 116
- Pāṇḍu 116, 199
- pāṇigrahaṇa 87
- paramour 195
- Pārendi 26
- Paramātinuu 22
- Parśu 144
- Parental Incest 126
- parinaya 188
- Parivettā 54
- Parivṛkti 108
- Paruṣaī 28, 159
- Pasenadi 125
- Pastyā 4
- Pathans 108
- Pārvati 212
- paterfamilias* 86
- patriarchal society 147
- perfumes 169
- Pericles 180
- Persephone 28
- Persia 218
- Peśas 161, 164, 165
- Peśamsi 165, 180
- Peśwaz 165
- philosophy 185
- Pischel 7, 186
- Pitarā 10
- pity-kanyā 128, 124
- Pivari 124
- Plato 180
- Poetry 176, 179
- Pālāgali 108
- Political conference 219
- marriage 108
- Polygamy 90, 101, 103, 105, 107, 109, 111, 149, 198, 205, 218
- Polyandry 90, 112, 114, 115, 116, 198, 205, 218
- Portugese 108
- Post-Homeric days 216
- times 186
- post-Muslim period 167
- Prajāpati 26, 82, 127
- Prājāpatya 65, 66, 67, 69, 214
- Fræn Nath, Dr. 125, 126, 127
- Pratiloma 56, 62
- Pre-Mauryan clay artists 25
- terracotta 166
- Pre-Rgvedic society 178
- Praxiteles 191
- priestess 22
- prose 179
- Prṣṇi 27
- Pṛthivi 5, 7, 9, 25, 81
- Prostitution (Babylonian type) 201
- punarbhū 95
- Punjab 160, 165, 184, 205
- Purandhi 25, 81, 100, 102, 151
- Purāṇas 26, 125, 126, 127, 178
- Puranic literature 8, 118
- tradition 116, 122, 124, 126, 128
- purdah 185, 188, 216
- Puri 167
- Purukutsa 100, 123
- Purumilha 50, 57, 58, 61, 71
- Purumitra 100, 126
- Pururavā 81, 48, 62, 72, 88, 108, 154, 178, 200, 201
- Aila 78
- Pūṣan 8, 127
- pyramid 42
- R
- Rabindranath Tagore, Dr. 228
- Radhakrishnan, Sir S. 2, 22
- Raghu 35, 47, 66
- Raghuvamśa* 85
- Raibhi 77
- Rājagṛha 204
- Rājanya 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 61, 70, 215
- Rajputana 167
- Rākā 25
- Rākṣasa 65, 71
- Rāma 124, 218
- Rāmāyana* 11, 181
- Rathavīti 48, 56, 59, 145
- Red Indians 28
- Remarriage 92, 95, 96
- Religion 211
- Revolt of Asian Womanhood* 228
- Rgveda* 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 21, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 31, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 43, 46, 49, 51, 53-56, 61, 62, 64, 66, 70, 71, 73, 74, 76, 90, 92, 95, 96, 97, 100, 101, 102, 104, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 116, 117, 118, 122, 123, 126, 127, 130, 137, 138, 139, 140, 144, 147, 149, 150, 156, 157, 160, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 170, 171, 178, 174, 175, 176, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 190, 194, 198, 200, 201, 203, 206, 207, 208, 210, 214
- Rgvedic age 149, 207, 218
- civilization 160
- community 154

—custom	89	161	Sarasvati	22, 23, 25, 28, 31, 184, 208	208
—family		40	Sari		161
—marriage	88,	187	Sarkar, S. C., Prof.	85, 26, 55, 62, 63,
—period		218		98, 107, 111, 114, 122, 162, 164, 165,
—posts		4, 25			170, 202
— Samhitā	2, 50, 55, 79, 185, 175,	178,	Sarparājñi		177, 210
		195	Śaśiyasi	50, 57, 58, 59, 61, 146
—society	3, 46, 68, 88, 90, 184, 185,		Śaivati		62, 158
		198, 206, 228	Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa	90, 81, 168
—wife		152	Satrajit		124
rings		167	Satavat		124
river goddess		28	Satvati		124
Rjṛāśva		195	Sati		90, 219
Rodasi		118, 114, 168	Savitā	70, 75, 101, 112, 176
Romaśā	58, 60, 61, 62, 176		Savitr	5, 77, 79, 81, 102, 142, 151
Roman Empire		227	Sastri, A. Mahadev		209
—ladies		218	Saranyū		91
—motherhood		227	Satyavāna		212
Roth, Prof.		116	saubhāgya		181
Rsi	3, 4, 5, 11, 17, 27, 86, 87, 56		Sāvitrī		212
Rta		4	Semitic races		126
Rudras		8, 21, 144	Seclusion of women		188, 189
Rukmiṇī		71	Shaw, G. B.		211
			shawl		116, 161, 215
			Sic		161, 162
			Sister marriage		127
			Sindhu		28, 184
			Simhikā		128
			singing		204, 205
			Sinivāli		25, 168
			Siphā		109
			Siri		168
			sister		4
			Śitā	11, 124, 129, 212
			Śiva	22, 205, 212
			Slave-girls	107, 109, 111, 148, 149, 214
			Smṛti	64, 65, 67, 218
			Sobhari-kāṇva		111
			Soma	14, 18, 51, 67, 75, 82, 85, 88,
				102, 112, 118, 114, 189, 148, 145,
					176
			Soma (beverage)		199
			—juice		180, 188
			—plant		186, 209
			Social conference		219
			Socrates		190
			Śrājaya		124
			Śrājayī		124
			Sophocles		190
			Sparta		44, 215, 217
			Spartans		214, 215
			spirits		18
			Śradhā		26, 177
			Śrāvāṇa		106
			Śrutabandhu		177

INDEX

241

Vinaya	204	Wilson	2, 36, 148
Vipāśā	28	Woman	72
Viprabandhu	177	Women sages	159
Vipracitti	128	—soldiers	205
Virajā	128	Women's right in ancestral pro-
Viśaḥ	101	perty	224
Viśas	55, 218
Viśasanam	87	X
Viśpalā	148, 181, 182, 216
Viśvāvasu	51, 52, 58, 78, 85, 86	Xenophon	191
Viśvavārā	176
Viśvāmitra	129, 178	Y
Vivasvān	24, 118, 128, 180
Vivasvat	117	yajamāna	8, 101
Viśvedevās	114	yajñas	110
Vitastā	28	Yajur Veda	2, 25, 64, 174
Vṛṣākapi	192, 190	Yama	24, 117, 118, 119, 121, 126, 179, 201
Vṛtra	81, 150, 205	Yami	24, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 178, 179, 201, 218
	W	Yamunā	28
Weber	86	yātrā	204
Wallis	7	Yayāti	62, 122, 128, 126
Wedding dress	86	Yaśodā	128
West	219, 220, 227	yojana	16
Wife, her dignity	129	yoṣā	51
her duties	183	yoṣan	51
her religious duties	184	yoṣaṇā	51
her temporal duties	187	yoṣit	51
other duties	143	Yudhiṣṭhira	149
legal status	146	yuvati	51
social status	153
other side of the picture	153	Z
her dress	156
Widows	91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 99, 215, 219	Zimmer	86

ERRATA

Read	considered	for	considred	on p. 43, line 31.
„	of riotous	„	ofriotous	„ p. 45, „ 22.
„	but	„	dut	„ p. 75, „ 10.
„	Hair-coiffure	„	Hair-cuiffure	„ p. 168, sub-heading.
„	heels	„	heals	„ p. 182, line 22.
„	their	„	there	„ p. 188, „ 15.
„	was	„	were	„ p. 207, „ 23.
„	them	„	then	„ p. 218, „ 29.

Change the verse printed under footnote No. 4 on p. 150 into the following :—

स्त्रियो हि दास आयुधानि चक्रे किं मा करन्नबला अस्य सेना : । ibid., V. 30, 9.

